The Wagner Male chorus will give their next entertainment some time the first part of February. The chorus has gone to a great deal of expense in securing in addition to their own numbers the services of Mr. and Mrs. Fenton in solos and duets. They are conceded to be the best singers in duets on the stage today and the Wagners are to be congratulated in securing such a fine attraction as these two artists. Not being satisfied with these additions, the Wagners will also bring Mr. Ferdinand Warner conceded to be the greatest accompanist in the country today. Watch the paper for the date of the Wagner male chorus.

His sister, who was very faithful to him during his trial, was at the jail to bid him goodbye. The girl was completely overcome by the farewell and while she was with her brother in the second floor corridor, her sobs could be heard in the office.

Many heretofore unknown facts have come to light before the coroners jury sitting on the death of Morgan Hamilton, the P. M. brakeman found dead near Kirks Crossing last week. Hamilton was a brakeman on a freight train which was merged with a regular passenger. He was returning on this train. At Muskegon it is said, he was riding in the cab, and intended to take care of a switch for the train crew a short ways out of this city. At Kirk, it is said, that Hamilton got off the cab and started back to the train toward one of his own cars. The crew of the first engine saw him as he passed a light in the train further back. A number of train crew men believe that Hamilton was knocked down when trying to catch the rear car and that he lay unconscious on the track until the arrival of the snow plow a few hours afterwards, when his head was fractured by the edge of the plow.

Because of the breakdown on the Goodrich liner Arizona, the service will be discontinued for this season. Next year, however, the line will have the Alabama in commission and there will be all year round service. The Arizona was especially fitted for the translake winter service this year and the accident put the winter boat out of commission.—Grand Haven Tribune.

Yielding to the continued appeals of horsemen for a race course within the city limits, the common council has designated two blocks on Ninth street for that purpose. The track is fully a half mile long and runs parallel with the principal business thoroughfare, being within easy access. Every afternoon large crowds gather to witness several exciting races in which the best local horses are entered. The Boone Bros. have bought out George R. Joe Bell and Sadie Brooks and the sport promises to become a permanent feature.

A strange story is related in connection with the death of Morgan M. Hamilton, the Pere Marquette brakeman whose lifeless body was found along the track near Kirk's crossing on the Pentwater division Tuesday. Morgan was formerly in the employ of the Holland Interurban and frequently intimated to his fellow employees that he had a premonition of being killed some day, as he considered his work too dangerous. Although his comrades ridiculed the idea, Morgan applied for a position as brakeman on the Pere Marquette and was accepted. Monday he went out on a northbound freight which became stalled in the snowdrift, and he returned on the regular passenger train. While the train was in motion, Morgan left the cab of the engine and it is presumed that he fell off in attempting to climb over the tender into the baggage. He was not missed until a second incoming train whose engine was spattered with blood told the story of his death.

Glad He Went to Cuba

For the Holland City News.

Owing to being extremely busy, it has been practically impossible to write to my friends in Holland since I left for Bartle, Cuba and, therefore use the columns of the News for that purpose. We started from Grand Rapids with Mr. Whelan's party on the sixth and landed the next morning in Cincinnati, as we only had a half hour to make connections to the next depot, Mr. Whelan wired ahead to have cabs in readiness and we made a flying trip just catching the train which is on the Queen and Crescent route. This is a beautiful train and we went flying. We were on the train for a day and a half stopping only at the most important stations and for coal and water. The longest stop we made was in the quaint town of Jacksonville, Florida. From there we went to Kingsley and took a large steamboat for Havana where we landed on the twelfth.

Mr. Whelan took us all over Havana in a carriage and the sights were grander than any that I had ever seen. All the buildings are white and made of marble and the highest one is not over four stories, and not a window in the whole city which seemed funny to me after going through a part of Holland's old fashioned winters. Most of the streets are so narrow that you can nearly jump across, while some are very wide with rows of palms where the people all promenade on Sunday and holidays "dressed to kill" while the music plays all day. We could have stayed a week in Havana and not seen it all. From Havana we took the train for Camaguey a distance of 450 miles. We landed there Sunday night and went to a fine hotel, also without windows, where we had a nice rest. We got up early the next morning to see what we could see. Nick took us all to a Catholic church and I must say that I never heard such music and singing in my life it was simply grand. Camaguey has a population of about 60,000. Sunday afternoon we took the train for Bartle, where a big square meal was prepared for us and it was the best I ever ate in fact all the way from Havana. The food was par excellence. The native guards came through the car with all kinds of fruit such as oranges, bananas, grapefruit and other tropical fruits which I never saw or heard of before. They also peddled baloney, cheese and native beer called tavola. Just think of riding on a train for hundreds of miles through thick forests and the ties on the road all mahogany. To show, however, that the island is rapidly becoming developed we noticed in several sections along the road fine gardens with onions, cabbage and lettuce as nice as any I ever saw at home.

The grass is so tall here that all we could see was the backs of the cattle in the pastures as the train went whizzing by. There are a great many cattle here. Every field seems to be filled with them and there would certainly be a great chance for a young Holland butcher. The Cubans it appeared to me travel a great deal and seem to have lots of money and spend it generously.

One peculiar thing I noticed while enroute was regular flower gardens in the trees. It is all flowers, fruit and green that you see here, what a strange contrast to what we have just left; and birds of all kinds, green and black parrots and canaries on every limb. Some of the Cuban passengers on the train had their little children with them and all they wore was a little apron and a broad smile, in that respect it certainly would put Lokker & Rutgers to the bad if they were here.

Coming back to Bartle after supper we mingled with the people there and I say after being here a few weeks that Cuba was the garden spot of the world and surpasses anything Mr. Whelan told me about it. Bartle is already a thriving little burz with a nice depot, two saw mills, canning factory and soon our furniture factory in which the machinery is nearly placed. There is plenty of work here for good machine hands and carpenters. The labor is what we need, as there is plenty of work. Cuba is a cheap place to live. No coal or wood bills, scarcely any clothing and those of the lightest and cheapest material. All the fruit and vegetables for the asking and taking that out of your annual living expenses means something.

Well, friends, I must close now and say finally that the climate of Cuba can't be beat.

Horse Through Bridge

Mistaking the justice of the Holland interurban south of Grand Rapids near the Alabastine factory for the regular bridge, a man by the name of Jones, drove his team of horses onto the ties last Friday night. They narrowly escaped serious injury. Jones lives in Jamestown.

Jones soon discovered his error and word was sent to Humane Agent Randolph and Sheriff Sheriff Horky. Deputy Sheriff Turpin went to the scene and immediately started to extricate the animals. By the time the officers got to the place a large crowd of men and boys had gathered about.

One of the horses was in a worse predicament than the other, having gotten its legs clear through the bridge. It was necessary to provide a temporary block and tackle and a chain was looped around the horses' bodies. It took about a dozen men to pry the animals upon their feet. Then it was necessary to tie their feet to keep the horses from floundering back into the same condition.

Endorsed by unknown people. Mrs. E. Van den Tak, 243 East Eleventh street, Holland, Mich., says, "I have been so greatly benefited by Doan's Kidney Pills that I am pleased to recommend them. I suffered for a long time from dull, nagging backaches and in the morning on arising I was so stiff and lame that it was difficult for me to stoop or lift. I always felt tired and I had but little strength or energy. When Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention, I procured a box from J. O. Doeburg's drug store and soon after I began their use they had driven away my trouble. I can now rest well and I do not have those dull pains in my back."

We are all interested in a Clean Holland. Whether you are in the neighborhood of a smoky, busy factory, or away from it; you cannot help but feel and see the dirt and grime that is in the air. The Laundry knows it when he cleans your linen; the housewife or landress knows it when she "does the family wash." Everything is black and sooty; from the dish towel in the kitchen to the best lace curtains, from the baby's stockings to mother's best "lingerie" waist. Every week, in every family you hear exclaimed "Get! The Washing is big this week."

Why?

ANSWER:—SOFT COAL

Don't put all the blame on the busy factory. You can depend on it, that a GOOD PART of your troubles, come from your own or neighbor's chimney, where SOFT COAL is being burned.

There is a Remedy:

Cook with GAS.

Hat with COKE

Coke and soft coal will cost you the same $5.50 per ton. A ton of coke will go almost twice as far as a ton of soft coal, and has no smoke, soot or dust, to make the House work a "drudgery."

To Investigate High Prices

In starting out to inquire into the reasons for the high prices of food products, the Department of Agriculture is engaging in a good work. Secretary Wilson says the department has agents in every county throughout the country, and they have been directed to learn the cost of production of the principal food articles, and the prices which the farmers receive for them, and when the figures are obtained they will be promptly published. "We intend to bring out the truth," he declares, "regardless of whom it hurts or benefits. I am convinced that the public is compelled to pay a great deal more for everything it eats than it should."

The high cost of living is one of the serious features of the situation throughout the country. Not only are nearly all articles of food higher than ever before, but clothing and every other necessity has reached figures never touched in the past. Possibly Secretary Wilson's investigators may be able to get at the reason for the high prices for the things which we eat, and may thus give a chance to bring them down to the level of a few years ago, if it should turn out that somebody is getting inordinate profits at present. This is a matter in which nine-tenths of the 90,000,000 people of the country have a large interest.

That the tariff is not responsible for the high prices is plain. The advance affects the things that are not on the customs schedules as well as those which are upon them. Moreover, the advance is world-wide. Nor can the trusts, in all cases, be held accountable. In some instances, however, they are probably to be blamed. Secretary Wilson attributes the advance in meat prices to the beef trust, and he may be correct. Many of the cattle raisers have said that they sell their products for only a trifling advance over a few years ago. If those persons are right who say that the supply of farm products is not keeping up with the demand, one cause for high prices is revealed. The results of the investigations by the Department of Agriculture will be awaited with interest by the country.

Why this Mark of Distinction?

Why is it that when a man discovers that he is a genius he allows his hair to grow long and that when a woman becomes similarly conscious she has her hair cut short? It probably grows out of the fact that, learning that they are different from others, they wish to emphasize the fact by some outward distinguishing mark. The woman who merely keeps house, raises children, supports the church, toils for missions, and gives home entertainments, will wear her hair in coils, puffs or otherwise piled upon her head. The female genius goes to the other extreme. She cuts hers off at the nape of the neck. So also the ordinary man, who merely works for a living, votes and tramps with a musket if his country calls, wears his hair short to have it out of the way. But the genius, thinking more about himself, sees the value of an external sign that he is not an ordinary. Prophets, artists, musicians, have long hair, affect velvet coats, and, now velvet hats. But we do not see that our college professors, the geniuses of the laboratory, the conquerors of the stars or the deep miners of research clothe or rig themselves differently from their fellows. There is genius and genius, evidently.

Horses that Need Warm Blankets

With winter upon us, storms and often blizzards, the mercury hugging the zero mark, many horses used for commercial purposes are not blanketed. The chief sufferers are the horses on some delivery wagons and those belonging to milk dealers and the like.

Often we see a driver supplied a blanket throw it at the horse rather than take trouble to put it on. The horse cannot speak and the driver apparently does not care. The horse that is exposed to frigid elements all day needs a blanket. The only practical blanket is the one put on under the harness. The firm or company that provides blankets for its horses has less to charge in the loss column of its ledger than the firm that neglects the item; for a horse will endure longer service if humanely covered.

Next time you go down town on a cold day count the horses that are properly protected and you will find they are few and far between.

The remedy for this neglect is for every woman to notify the grocer, milkman and vegetable man who neglects this humane act that unless they blanket their horses on stormy days they need not stop at her door. This would bring a neigh of gratitude from many suffering horses.

According to the Eastern markets reports the cranberry crop is the only one that has not been cornered or manipulated in the interests of high prices. There is relief in sight for those who can be satisfied with cranberries.

As the old familiar song implies the children under sixteen will have to "Listen to the Mocking bird."

It's cold enough for anyone but the icemen.

It is hoped that the price of ice this summer may correspond favorably with the register on the thermometer this winter.

Fifteen hundred dogs have been exterminated during dog catcher Verwey's administration and still no impression has been made as to the number of the "dog gon" dogs.

Peter Verwey has several methods of catching canines from large pockets to straps. But we do not see "laying salt on their tails in the list. The most effective method, however, seems to be making a noise like a dog.

Cooking Brings Revenue for Athletes

Athletes in the Holland high school received a good financial boost through the proceeds derived from a sale of baked goods inaugurated and conducted by the girls. As the school buildings are not equipped with a gymnasium for winter sports, the students resolved to lease Price's rink for the winter, but lack of funds proved a serious handicap.

The girls, however, determined to see the success of the venture, decided on a novel scheme. They got together and each one was asked to demonstrate her ability in domestic science. In a single day enough baked goods being accumulated to warrant a sale, a widow in a down town store was donated, the boys did the advertising stunts, and before the day was half spent, the best cooks were sent home to replenish the stock. Housewives have discovered that their daughters have become experts in the culinary line and they took a day's rest from baking and cooking and laid in a supply of the dainties prepared by the girls.

Under the leadership of Prin. O. W. Stevenson, athletics will be placed on a high basis this season and teams will be organized in every phase of indoor sports. Class teams of basket ball will fight for supremacy and the regular teams will arrange a schedule for games with outside teams.

Not to be outdone by the girls, the boys will donate their proportion of the expenses and are preparing a play which should net a handsome revenue. The students are delighted over the success of their first venture and as a result athletics will form a leading form a leading part in the high school curriculum this winter.

WHAT YOU SAW IN THIS PAPER

35 Years ago To-day.

WHAT YOU SAW 30 YEARS AGO
Hon. Rix Robinson, the pioneer settler of the Grand River valley, died at his home in Ada on Tuesday aged 86 years.

It is said that Daniel Webster never was guilty of paying back borrowed money, and if this fact made him famous we know of a thousand men who will in time become bright stars in the galaxy of fame.

WHAT YOU SAW 30 YEARS AGO

Now here is something new. Messrs VanSlooten & Tromp utilize their steam threshing power in winter to saw lumber. Arnold DeFeyer has just finished putting up a sawmill for the above parties. The mill is located about seven miles from the city. This can really be called cute.

Rev. R. Pieters, pastor of the First Reformed church, was operated on by Dr. DeCamp of Grand Rapids on Tuesday, assisted by a number of physicians from this city and surrounding villages. The ravages of the complaint from which Rev. Pieters is suffering, and which make operations of more and more frequent occurrence, keep his congregation and friends in constant anxiety as to his physical welfare.

Another old settler has passed away. J. Slag, Sr., died on Thursday morning at the age of 86 years. For some time past he has been boarding with Mr. and Mrs. Oostema, Mrs. Oostema being his youngest daughter, and a few days while he was strolling along he slipped and fell on the icy sidewalk, he has since complained of pain in the breast, grew worse and died as noted above.

WHAT YOU SAW 25 YEARS AGO

Alfred Huntly has taken the oath of office as chief engineer of the fire department and Fred Nye has been appointed as assistant chief by the council. Both gentlemen will make good officers.

Mrs. L. Sprietsma died last Saturday evening after an illness of a few weeks. Mrs. Sprietsma was nearly seventy years of age. Her funeral occurred in the First church on last Monday, Rev. E. Bos conducted the services.

J. P. Oggel, formerly second miller in the Standard Roller mill, is now traveling agent for the mill for the Michigan trade.

WHAT YOU SAW 20 YEARS AGO

Mr. John Cook of this city has purchased the interest of J. Duursema of Grand Haven in the firm of C. N. Addison & Co. of that city. Mr. Cook has many warm friends in Holland who will regret that this new venture will result in the departure of himself and family from Holland but all of them will wish him success in his new business and hope that they may find as many friends in Grand Haven as they leave behind them here. John is an active, enterprising business man and the firm of C. N. Addison will find the new member a hustler in every respect.

An assistant clerk was born to Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Williams last Tuesday, to help them in their many hotel duties during the years to come.

WHAT YOU SAW 15 YEARS AGO

At eleven o'clock on Monday an alarm was sent in from box 21 on account of a fire in the undertaking rooms of John Alberti. Both hose companies responded promptly and before the flames had gained much headway streams were turned on thru both the main and rear entrance where the fire was located. The smoke permeated the entire building and it was with considerable difficulty that F. C. Hall and wife and mother, who occupied the upper floor, made their escape without being suffocated. Mr. Alberti's tools, caskets, shrouds, etc. were badly damaged and the loss is estimated at $500, with no insurance on his stock. The loss sustained on the building has been adjusted at $119 by the Commercial Union of which J. O. Doesburg is the local agent. As to C. L. Streng & Son their loss is harder to ascertain, the stock having suffered largely on account of water and smoke, more particularly the latter. They carry policies to the amount of $8,800 in six companies. Adjusters are on the ground and consider the loss a hard one to estimate. The fire originated on the floor of the basement and Mr. Alberti is at loss to know how it started as there was no stove in that part of the building. Later—the damage on the stock of C. L. Streng & Son is much less than was first supposed, and was adjusted Friday noon.

WHAT YOU SAW 10 YEARS AGO

Mrs. A. Lefebre died Tuesday night at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. Vanderberg of Overisel. She lived at 130 East Ninth St. and was spending the holidays with her daughter. Her death was quite sudden as she was enjoying comparatively good health until Tuesday afternoon when she was taken sick and grew rapidly worse until 10:40 in the evening she passed away. She was 65 years of age and was numbered among the early pioneers of this city. The funeral will be held from the house, Ninth street, this afternoon at 1 o'clock, Rev. Van Houten officiating.

Miss Elsie Rosendahl died at two o'clock this morning at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Rosendahl, Second street, after an illness of two weeks. The cause of her death was cerebro-spinal meningitis.

After 10 years of suffering Wilem Zeel passed away last Tuesday. Mr. Zeel was afflicted with paralysis about 10 years ago and his health began to fail gradually until he became a hopeless invalid, but through all those years of torture he patiently suffered in silence.

DEATHS

Mrs. A. J. Wibalda, wife of the well known Sixteenth St. merchant died very suddenly Monday morning. Mrs. Wibalda, who was 39 years of age, was taken very sick in the early hours of the morning and died within three hours of the attack. She has been a resident of this city for many years, coming here twenty years ago from Muskegon. She is survived by her husband and six children. Funeral services will be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock from the Central Ave. church, of which she was a member. Rev. R. L. Haan officiating.

After a long illness Mrs. Jane Dowding died Friday morning at the home of her daughter Mrs. J. DeBoer, 280 River street. Mrs. Dowding was 74 years of age and before coming to reside with her daughter about 15 years ago had resided in Grand Rapids.

Christ Rosin, an old resident of this city, died at the home of his brother, 318 W. 12th street. He was 76 years of age and is survived only by two brothers, with one of whom he made his home. The funeral was held from the home on Saturday afternoon, Rev. P. F. Schuelke officiating.

Speakers Chosen

At a meeting of the Senior class of Hope college, the following speakers were chosen for June's commencement: H. K. Pasma, A. L. VerHulst, Jacob Heemstra and Jennie Pikaart. The valedictorian, who is selected by the faculty on merit of scholarship, has not yet been named.

Rehearsals for the senior play are being held. The play is entitled "One of the Eight," has a college setting and the cast chosen represents the best talent of the class. The exact date has not been decided upon. The play committee is composed of H. K. Pasma, Frank Hoppers and Jennie Pikaart, Jean Vis is business manager and James Dykema has charge of the staging and equipment. The proceeds will be used to erect a fitting memorial on the campus to the class of 1910.

Unique Lecture Tonight

The lecture number on tonight at Carnegie hall is a unique one in the history of the course. In character it is chiefly musical, the aggregation to appear being The Whitney Bros. Quartet. Besides the quartet selections, however, there will be individual selections by the two soloists of the troupe, Alvin and Yale Whitney. Edwin M. Whitney, another of the four is an impersonator of recognized ability. The fourth member of the quartet is a professional accompanist in addition to his other accomplishments. If we may judge by journalistic criticism, the varied program to be rendered will meet with an enthusiastic reception.

C. Q. D. Saved Arizona

The steamer Arizona of the Goodrich line bound from Chicago to Grand Haven, became disabbed thirty miles out of Chicago and was saved from a night of helpless wallowing about the lake, by the wireless.

The Arizona left Chicago on her regular time and headed for Grand Haven in her usual course. When thirty miles off the west coast, one of the cylinders became disabled and the boat was helpless. There was not a great deal of sea running at the time but the wind was freshening up from the southwest and there was of course danger to the craft, caught helpless out on the lake on a winter night.

That was where the wireless proved its worth once more. Immediately the "C. Q. D." call flashed out over the lake from the disabled boat, and within five minutes the message of distress had been up by the operators on the sister ships of the Arizona. The Indiana was lying at her dock in and the Iowa in Racine. Both boats started at once for the Arizona. The Indiana reached the scene first and took the ship in tow and started shoreward. On the way back she met the Iowa and turned her tow over to the latter boat. The Iowa and Arizona went to Chicago and the Indiana went on to Milwaukee.

Treble Clef Recital

The Treble Clef club, under the leadership of J. Jans Helder, and assisted by the well known reader Mrs. Myrtle Koon Cherryman, and Miss Anna Schuelke, accompanist, rendered a most difficult and varied program Monday night with remarkable success.

The wide range of selections rendered proves conclusively the solid training of the chorus. Such difficult productions as Wagner's "Faithful and True" from Lohengrin and "Across the Still Lagoon" by Loge were sung with perfect modulation and expression. "An Irish Folk Song" seems to have met with especial approval from music lovers. The lighter selections, a lullaby by Hawley, "The Chase of the Butterflies" by Clapisoun and "Summer Fancies" by Berwald called for a display of fine technique by the chorus.

Mr. Helder is always happy in his selection and the appreciation of the audience was evident. His rendering of "Still Wie Die Nacht" and "Na Oostland Wil Ik Vaaren" are only a few of the songs in which he awakened a sympathetic response from the audience.

Mrs. Cherryman again proved her ability as an entertainer. Her pathos and humor alike captivated the audience and she was forced to respond to repeated encores. Miss Schuelke's work as accompanist greatly aided the chorus, and the fact that Mr. Helder himself was assisted by her in his solos speaks well for her ability.

Considering the time of its organization, the skill displayed by the chorus is remarkable. Its real work began last September so that only months of actual training have been expended on a program so well rendered.

What would have been a pretty contest between the Olympics and the Interurbans Friday night was ended abruptly by the visitors leaving the floor. The score was tied in the ninth inning, the Interurbans had one man out and the bases full when the Olympics left the floor on the plea of catching the car. Trouble was prevented by the timely interference of Night Officer Leonard. The store stood 6 to 6 when the game was terminated. Davidson did some tall pitching for the visitors, although Peterson was hardly in his usual form.

Interest in athletics has taken a decided form at the high school. Girl's classes will be conducted Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons. Inter class basket ball games will be played and a fast school team will be developed. Price's rink has been rented for use as a gymnasium during the winter. Saturday a very successful baked goods sale was conducted by the high school girls at B. Steketee's store. The receipts will be used to defray expenses incident to the new project.

Synopsis

CHAPTER I—Judith Bartelmy, society woman, goes to the office of the Daily Advance to protest against a story which had severely criticized her father, a judge of the United States court.

Her father had diplomatically suggested to her that Wheeler Brand might have written the story. This she found difficult to believe. But she must be convinced, and one of her motives in visiting the newspaper had been to ask him—to ask him to tell her that he was not the author of the new attack on her father. She must see him and learn the truth from his lips alone.

"Is Mr. Brand in the office now?" she asked.

"Yes, I think so."

"Would it be possible for me to see him?"

"Why, yes, if you wish. I'll send for him."

McHenry summoned the boy and told him to "ask Mr. Brand to come in."

"We've noticed"—she hesitated—"all his friends have noticed that he's becoming very radical lately." Judith rose from the chair and stepped nervously toward the editor's desk.

"Oh," he laughed, "they all get that when they're young, like the measles." "And that's something they all get over, isn't it?" she asked eagerly.

"Yes," responded McHenry, stirring as though to leave the room.

Judith stepped squarely in front of his desk.

"But I don't want to disturb you. Can't I go to his office?"

"He hasn't got any office, and they're all bunched in the local room in their shirt sleeves smoking. You wouldn't like it. We haven't a reception room." McHenry laughed as he spoke.

In his shirt sleeves, rolled to his elbows, with quick steps and squared shoulders, Wheeler Brand, one of the ablest men on the city staff of the Advance, strode into the office of the managing editor through the door leading from the city and telegraph rooms.

"Yes, sir," he greeted McHenry.

Then he stopped short both in his steps and in his speech. He had caught sight of the managing editor's visitor. "Why, Judith!" he gasped.

"What in heaven's name are you doing here? I"—At this point words failed him, and he stood staring at her, with his breast heaving violently as the result of his surprise.

The girl was also deeply disturbed in spite of her previous knowledge that she was to be confronted by the man she loved.

McHenry thought that the moment had arrived when his presence was no longer necessary.

"Miss Bartelmy has asked to see you for a few minutes," he said, rising and starting toward a door. "You may talk here." A handful of proof sheets rustled in his grasp as he disappeared.

Wheeler Brand started toward the girl.

"Is there anything the matter?" he queried anxiously.

She hesitated before answering.

Then she spoke determinedly.

"Yes; two things. First, you did not come to my reception this afternoon; secondly, there is that article about father this morning."

"I couldn't get off from the office to attend the reception, and I am awfully sorry," he protested. "But as for the story about your father—well, did he send you here?"

"No, he didn't send me. But I couldn't help feeling how disturbed he was, and—"

"Then he knew you were coming?"

"Why, yes," Judith was trying hard to understand what he meant by seeking out her father's knowledge of her present mission, one which was to her decidedly unpleasant.

Wheeler was plainly impressed, and unfavorably so, at the girl's reply.

"Oh!" he ejaculated disappointedly. The quickly thinking girl detected the significant tone of the newspaper writer's reply and hastened to explain.

"I heard my father say at dinner that he feared there would be another attack tomorrow," she said, "and I hoped through you to prevent its publication and to make the Advance apologize for what it said this morning. I don't see how your paper dares to publish such things."

"But, Judith," he answered, "we couldn't drop a story as big as that. We had to print it. That's what we're here for."

But she was still insistent.

"Oh, of course, print the story, but I mean the insinuation all through. Why, by using such unfair means newspapers can bring discredit on any one. Mr. McHenry refused to apologize. He wouldn't even tell me who wrote it. Do you know?"

Brand gave a violent start. At first, in her present mood, he hardly dared answer the girl. With a determined effort he pulled himself together and answered her question.

"Yes, I know who wrote it."

"Who?" Judith leaned toward him, gazing intently into his eyes.

"I wrote it," he announced.

Judith started back aghast.

"You, Wheeler? Why?" she cried hysterically.

"I had no choice." He struggled to maintain his grip on himself.

"You had no choice?"

"Judith, when this Lansing Iron case first broke loose," Brand responded firmly, "I saw straight off that it was one of the slickest—well, that there was a big story in it. I didn't know your father was involved in this at first. I just followed the path, and when I saw where it was leading me I wanted to turn back because of you, but I couldn't." He stopped for a moment, then went on: "No, no. I could not stop—not even—for you!"

"But it isn't loyal of you," was her response. "It wasn't like you—to atack him suddenly in this way. It's almost as if you struck him from behind. And do you not see, Wheeler, that you are hurting me as much as you injure him? I am his daughter, Wheeler, and if you ruin my father you will ruin me."

She covered her face with her hands, and her bosom heaved convulsively in her anguish.

"I wrote it, Judith," he announced.

Judith drew away from him a step or two. She surveyed him coldly.

"Wheeler, I came here thinking only of my father, but I suddenly find myself facing a much more serious question—not what kind of a man he is, but what kind of a man are you?"

Brand was deeply cut by her manner and her intonation.

"Judith, if you only knew the truth, all of it, things I can't tell you, you'd be with me heart and soul in what I'm trying to do."

He caught her in his arms again.

"Whatever I've done or whatever I may do I love you," he insisted passionately.

Judith showed equal fervor as she said:

"And you're more to me than my father, but for my sake you mustn't work against him. How could we ever be happy together if you did? You'll do this for me, Wheeler, just this? I want you to carry out your ideals and live up to your high purposes in every other way, but you must not attack him. Promise me that you'll never do it again. Won't you promise me that? And you'll retract that article you had this morning. You'll do this for me, just this?"

"Judith—it's the truth—and, knowing that, would you have me retract it?"

"Yes."

"I can't."

Judith began to take off the engagement ring Brand had given her.

"You don't mean to do that?" he cried in amazement.

"I most certainly do!"

He was almost frantic. He grasped her hand.

"I won't let you mean it. I can't let you go without your ring. You may be Judge Bartelmy's daughter, but you are going to be my wife. You've worn my ring for a month, and you must wear it forever!"

The girl passed his passionate appeal by without heeding it. She tossed back her pretty head defiantly, snatched the ring from her finger and threw it on the managing editor's desk.

"I'll not wear it again," she exclaimed resolutely, "unless—until you come to your senses." So expressing herself, she stalked majestically across the room.

"Judith," called Brand in desperation, fearing that she was about to leave him.

"Will you do what I ask?" she queried imperiously.

"I cannot," he answered simply.

The judge's daughter tossed her head independently, caught her skirt in her hand, turned her back swiftly on Brand and walked indignantly from the room.

Wheeler Brand, dazed, heart sick and discouraged and torn by the emotions that welled within him, leaned helplessly against the desk. After all, he reasoned, what did it all matter? There were lots of evil men in the world, always had been, always would be. What harm would it do if one dishonest judge were allowed to go unmolested, even if he happened to be a United States judge? Surely there were other dishonest judges, and he could not drive all of them off the bench—no, indeed. And, moreover, this thankless task he had shouldered would if he succeeded rob him of the girl he loved. It would rob him of the love of the girl who loved him.

Then the thought of the enthusiasm that had buoyed him as he wrote the story that had exposed Judge Bartel-my father, against my family—her voice began to break again—against me, I would not have believed it. And you have not told me that you will cease your attack."

Brand thought to palliate her. He seated himself on a corner of the managing editor's desk and bent toward her as she sat in a chair near him.

"Now, Judith, let me try to explain," he said entreatingly. "I think I can make you understand. You see, the Lansing Iron company owned a lot of valuable properties—ore ranges, machinery, railroad trackage, etc. If it had been managed halfway it would now be a wealth producing business, but some of our speculators downtown were trying to get hold of it to gamble with. They wanted to milk it, as the saying is, by watering it. They did have a stock market battle or two, which profited nobody but the lawyers on both sides. But they finally got it by juggling it into a receivership, which they never could have done if a United States judge had not been willing to exceed his functions. That judge was your father."

"Since the works shut down," he went on strongly, "the men are out of employment, and the gamblers have got rich because the company's gone broke. That's just what happened, and that's all I said."

"But it wasn't your facts, I tell you. It was your insinuation that was false."

"Not insinuation—interpretation."

"But it wasn't true—it wasn't true."

"Oh, yes, it was true, and more."

Judith verged on the hysterical again.

"If you loved me as you pretend to, no matter if you thought it true or not, you could not have written that article."

"Can't you see that I wasn't writing about your father, but about a United States judge who?"

She moved farther away from him.

"That's splitting hairs, Wheeler."

He walked to her side.

"Judith, please—please—don't let's quarrel about this."

The girl turned to him impulsively.

"Oh, Wheeler, we were on the verge of it, weren't we?" He cast his arms around her. "You're sorry, aren't you?" She looked fondly into his face. "And you will take back that article, won't you?"

"You mustn't ask me to do that; I can't," looking at her earnestly.

"You can't?"

"No."

Judith drew away from him a step or two. She surveyed him coldly.

"Wheeler, I came here thinking only of my father, but I suddenly find myself facing a much more serious question—not what kind of a man he is, but what kind of a man are you?"

Brand was deeply cut by her manner and her intonation.

And, moreover, this thankless task he had shouldered would if he succeeded rob him of the girl he loved. It would rob him of the love of the girl who loved him.

Then the thought of the enthusiasm that had buoyed him as he wrote the story that had exposed Judge Bartel-my came to him and clung to him. The inspiration in doing a strong man's work for the public good enthused the spirit of Wheeler Brand, captured his soul. The steady light burned once more in his eyes. He shook himself together—fastened his old time grip on himself. As for Judith, he would do his duty, and he would win her yet.

When the managing editor of the Advance re-entered his office and walked briskly toward his desk he found Wheeler Brand looking eagerly over a notebook which, quite unknown to McHenry, contained the data for an article on the Lansing Iron case even more damaging to Judge Bartelmy than the one already printed.

"Well, did you settle it?" asked McHenry.

Brand looked up and started toward the door.

"Yes, sir," he answered, and he was gone.

At this juncture Downs, the city editor, came into the managing editor's room. He addressed McHenry rapidly.

"Water main burst on Morton street; drowned seven dago kids in the basement of a tenement; mothers, scrub-women, gone out to work and locked them in; water rising." He drew close to the desk. "Children, climbing stairs to escape, found huddled in each other's arms on top step, drowned! All but the youngest hanging on to a string of beads; must have died praying."

The managing editor's face immediately lightened, and he pounded his desk enthusiastically.

"Good! Good! By glory, that's a dandy! That saves our lives! Now we'll have a paper tomorrow! We'll go the limit on this. Did you send a photographer?"

"Yes, sir, I did."

McHenry seized the office telephone.

"Night editor! Oh, hello! Cut three columns more out of those shavings. We've got a live one. Seven dago kids drowned. First time they ever saw water in their lives. Run three columns!" He hung up the receiver and turned to the city editor.

"Put in three leads and make it stick out like a sore thumb. And, say, put in a black faced bulletin saying the Advance will receive subscriptions for their families."

Durkin entered with a bundle of proofs.

"And, say, Downs," added McHenry, "print in bold faced type that the Advance will start the subscription with $100."

"Mr. Dupuy is downstairs," announced Durkin.

The managing editor could not suppress a sour expression which crept across his face. "Dupuy, eh?" he grunted half audibly. "Wonder what he wants around here now? He's a regular buttinski."

McHenry knew Dupuy in a business way, knew he was counsel for several of the big mercantile establishments which advertised in the Advance and that the lawyer had represented various corporations at the state capital.

"Well, I suppose I'll have to see him," he finally resolved. "Show Mr. Dupuy in," he called to the boy.

"Good evening," was Dupuy's greeting to McHenry as he entered and placed his overcoat on a chair.

"Good evening, Mr. Dupuy. What can I do for you?" The visitor seated himself at the right of McHenry's desk.

"McHenry," began Dupuy decidedly,

"This growing tendency to bring our judiciary into disrepute is a dangerous symptom of the unrest beneath the surface," spoke Dupuy pompously. "The federal bench is the ultimate bulwark."

McHenry laughed.

"Oh, capital in distress! Yes, I know all about that."

Dupuy stirred indignantly.

"There was no occasion for that remark," he shot forth tartly.

McHenry saw that Dupuy was very much in earnest, and the management of the Advance, as he had previously known it—representatives of an insurance company—would have desired to gratify the wishes of the powerful Dupuy returned McHenry's stare, and his discerning eye and brain enabled him to read the workings of McHenry's mind. He felt instinctively as he glared at McHenry that he had the managing editor "on the run." During the period of the insurance company's ownership there had been no doubt that the decision of the managing editor of the Advance would have been in favor of Dupuy and his demand for the discharge of Wheeler Brand. And the lawyer, like McHenry, knew nothing of the new owner that would change the attitude of the paper.

Dupuy was right in his estimate of McHenry's weakness. The lawyer lobbyist was playing in rare fortune, indeed, to discover in his opponent a man who dared not stand for the right. He well knew that he would not find the same sort of man in a position of importance in many other newspapers of the land. Well, too, did he know "the power of the press" throughout all America, for he had learned at bitter cost that it was the foe of all the Ed Dupuys and all those that employed them to serve their ends.

Finally McHenry spoke in answer to Dupuy's demand.

"Let us give Brand one more chance," protested McHenry. "I'll put him on baseball or water front. Come, now."

"I will be candid with you. I was instructed to make an example of somebody for this morning's story. Perhaps, though, a good hauling over might do for this time. Call him in now. It's his last chance."

A boy entered.

"Ask Mr. Brand to step in."

"I'd rather take a licking than do this," protested McHenry.

Dupuy was unsympathetic.

"Well, he's only got himself to thank," he snorted.

Wheeler Brand came in.

"Mr. Brand," began the managing editor, "there is a kick being made on the Bartelmy story of this morning."

"Yes, sir; I suppose so." Brand looked up and saw Dupuy, and the reporter's face showed that he understood.

"I forward the kick to you, Indorsing it O. K.," said McHenry. "In other words, the kick goes."

"Why, what?"

"This is a practical world," interposed Dupuy.

Brand grew bitter, for well he knew the practices of Dupuy.

"Oh, yes; I know the patten—a world of live and let live. We must be very careful before imputing motives, eh, Mr. Dupuy? Does not the good book say, 'Let him that is without sin among you cast the first stone—at United States judges'?"

"Wheeler, Wheeler," cried McHenry, "we only ask you in to talk it over calmly!"

"That man has hit me in the dark before," exclaimed Brand. "This is the first time that he has come into the light."

"I desire to say that my clients," put in Dupuy, "like a great many other of the—ah—subscribers—to this paper, were disappointed at what they conceived to be an unwarranted attack full of insinuations about one of the most distinguished members of the United States bench, and they wish merely as readers of the paper to express the hope that nothing of the sort will occur again, in which case they are willing to overlook this morning's article entirely—to, in fact, regard it merely as a mistake, a mistake made without malice."

"You mean I am to have another chance to hold my job if I'll be good from now on?" asked Brand.

Dupuy once more became complacent.

"Such, I believe, is Mr. McHenry's decision," he announced calmly.

"You certainly have your gall, Dupuy," cried Brand in menacing tones, "to think you can muzzle me for $40 a week. I've paid more than that for the privilege of fighting you."

The lawyer turned quickly to the managing editor.

"You better let him go, McHenry," he suggested. "He's a crank."

Wheeler Brand was amazed at the way in which McHenry allowed Dupuy to influence him.

"Does he give you orders?" he asked meaningfully of the managing editor.

"Yes, my boy; he does, and I accept your resignation."

The reporter was by no means daunted by his discharge.

"I'm sorry for you," he cried, inclining toward McHenry.

Dupuy laughed significantly.

"Reserve your sympathy for yourself, young man," he advised the young newspaper writer.

"Reserve your sympathy for Bartelmy; he'll need it before long," was his cutting retort.

"Oh! Is that so?" sneered Dupuy.

"Go west and grow up with the country, for if you hang around here to hurt Bartelmy don't forget that criminal libel is punishable with arrest."

"Sorry, old man," spoke McHenry kindly. "If I didn't have a family I'd go west with you."

"If it wasn't for men having families," put in Dupuy philosophically, "there'd be a revolution."

Brand straightened up and, with a contemptuous expression on his face, started toward the door.

FROST ALARM BELL.

In the evolution of the fruit growing industry in the Ozarks in Missouri the apple trees may wear bells. This condition is to be brought about in many orchards with the coming of the next season of balmy breezes and blossoms.

The scheme of protecting the buds of the orchards of the south, Missouri country by the use of the smudge, with which the ancients were familiar, has grown in popularity in recent years, and in its development there has been devised a system of alarms to be sounded automatically when the temperature in the orchard falls below the danger point, thus enabling the fruit grower to light his lamps and fires and protect the trees with smoke while providing sufficient heat to raise the temperature from 10 to 15 degrees.

An order recently has been placed for 20,000 oil lamps, or stoves, which are to be added to the equipment of the Hazeltine orchards, embracing 2,000 acres and containing 150,000 trees. The Hazeltine orchard represents the growth of an industry founded by Ira Hazeltine, a pioneer who settled in the Ozark country 75 years ago, and who became impressed early in life with the possibilities of this region as a fruit growing country.

Last spring, when the trees of the big orchards were loaded with blossoms and injury and loss by cold and frost was threatened, Mr. Hazeltine tried for the first time in his locality the experiment of burning oil in a sheet iron device. Hundreds of these oil lamps were used and with such effect that the harvest demonstrated in a measure the utility of the experiment. The Hazeltines and others interested in the fruit industry of Greene and adjoining counties expect to give the smudge a more perfect test next spring.

While the owners of the big orchards in this section are seeking to develop on a scientific basis the theories recognized by the pioneers, hundreds of the hill settlers are reaping benefits from the smudge used in a crude way, where fuel is plentiful and where the small farmer's family provides the stumps and brush and wisps of hay to make the dense smoke required and the heat that saves the bloom. The old-time farmer of the hills, however, never heard of the thermostat, or alarm thermometer, that is coming into use and will enable the fruit grower of the future to know with certainty when the temperature reaches the danger point—about 30 degrees above zero.

In the season of probable danger from frost last spring the Hazeltines had twenty men in readiness to respond at a moment's notice throughout the night and day until the danger point was passed.

The efficiency of vapor in connection with fire and smoke has been recognized as an agency in the protection of the bloom of fruit trees from frost damage and the experiments to be carried forward in Ozark orchards next year will take into account the possibilities of vapor as an agent for the preservation of the tender crops. Hundreds of fruit growers throughout the big orchard country of south Missouri are preparing to join in the experiments next spring.

Local Pianos Receive Glowing Praise in Technical Paper.

A beautiful example of what can be accomplished in the production of a high grade piano in the West is seen in the business of the Bush & Lane Piano company of Holland, Michigan, says the Chicago Musical Times. During the year just closing this company has experienced the most successful growth in its history and this growth has resulted from the quality of the product. Of course, back of this product there has been energy and ability and capital, but when it is all simmered down it found that the overwhelming factor in the success of the Bush & Lane Piano company is the Bush & Lane piano.

How often do we hear members of the trade speak discouragingly of the future of anyone who starts to manufacture a high grade piano without something like the prestige of a half-century behind it? These same people point to some of the old time high grade makers and to the fact that their business has failed to show growth during a decade or two and they cite those cases as evidences of the futility of attempting to impress upon the trade and public the true value of high grade pianos. Yet the Bush & Lane Piano company has proved by very practical illustration that there is a market for high grade pianos and they have proved more, namely, that it is not sufficient to manufacture simply a high grade piano but there must be in the instrument a certain life and snapiness and originality and modernity. The Bush & Lane piano has all of these points within and without and the makers have taken the lead in the invention and the acquisition of new ideas that will improve the quality and new designs that will improve the appearance and thereby attract the eye of the prospective buyer.

Those who are in touch with the retail trade are fully aware of the manner in which the Bush & Lane piano has become a tremendous factor in the development of the business of many retailers. And it is one of the few pianos whose merit is so obvious as to practically silence the criticism of competition. Thus we have traveling men for other houses speaking out of the fullness of their hearts in praise of the Bush & Lane piano while it is more than likely that it is the very instrument that has prevented them making sales here and there!

The success of the Bush & Lane house is a matter for congratulation to themselves and to all other piano makers striving for a better product.

A HUMAN ALARM CLOCK.

In a certain town in England there is a man who might well be called a human alarm clock. His business is to wake up people early in the morning, and this he does by tapping on the windows, as he goes from house to house. He rides on a tricycle, and uses a long fishing rod to tap the window of each house that he visits. It is said that his tapping is more persistent than the ringing of an alarm clock, and he does not stop tapping until he is certain that the person is not only awake, but out of bed.

This man is employed by many persons whose business compels them to start work in the early hours of the morning, and who wish to be awakened without fail at a given hour. He begins his rounds at 2 o'clock in the morning, and it is nearly 8 o'clock before he has tapped on the last window.

Don't let quacks and fakirs rob you of your hard earned dollars.

NO NAMES USED WITHOUT WRITTEN CONSENT.

THREATENED WITH PARALYSIS.

Peter E. Summers relates his experience:

"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretions and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Dr. Kennedy, though I had lost faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the New Method Treatment and it saved my life. The treatment was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and will continue to do so."

In the basement there are class rooms, committee rooms, and a large lecture hall, in addition to the heating apparatus.

The purchase of an organ will soon be made. This church has 108 families, a ladies society of 40 members and a Young Peoples' society of 36 members.
