Health clinic deals with influenza epidemic

The staff of the Hope College Health Clinic has been working overtime these past few days after a flu epidemic on the college campus filled the clinic to overflowing. According to Sharon Blanksma, Director of Health Services at Hope College, between 85 and 90 students per day were reported to be ill.

"Not only did we have our regular gynecology and allergy clinics going," said Blanksma, "but one of our three registered nurses was also ill." The problem of overcrowding, said Blanksma, was due in part to the fact that students were coming in to the health clinic located in Dow Center, when they actually might have been better off staying in bed. "A lot of college illnesses, including the flu, are viral," Blanksma said, "and there are no treatments except perhaps bed rest and lots of fluids."

"Students," she said, came to the health clinic primarily in hopes of getting a "quick fix" remedy. Some students who went to the clinic on Monday, she stated, said that they had to get well because they had papers due or tests coming up. "There's just no way (a person) is going to feel much better the next day, even if their fever is down," said Blanksma. "They'll just feel rotten anyway."

Most ill students had symptoms of the type A influenza virus, according to Blanksma, which include a high fever, body aches, a chronic cough and vomiting. Other students apparently had the 24-hour flu bug or a minor cold. As a result, the health clinic staff was kept very busy.

In fact, staff members were overloaded for much of the week. "Not only did we have our regular gynecology and allergy clinics going," said Blanksma, "but one of our three registered nurses was also ill."

Also, she said that the health clinic could actually do very little to cure the flu, but could alleviate some of the symptoms. "A lot of people think that antibiotics will fix anything," she said, "and that's just not true. We can't do much for people with the flu. What would help the most is if students would just realize that sitting in a waiting room and coughing on each other isn't going to make them any better and will probably make the other people worse."

Regarding rumors that the college would cancel classes because of the flu epidemic, Blanksma stated that they were just rumors. "In a residential setting like Hope, there's no way to isolate everyone, so it wouldn't help to cancel classes, since everyone lives around everyone else to begin with," she said. "My feeling is that the only way the school would be closed down is if all the professors got sick and couldn't teach."

Blanksma said that she did not expect the number of cases of the flu to decrease rapidly any time soon. "It will probably run a three-week course," she said. "The people who are infected now will probably infect several people around them, until the epidemic runs its course."

"It would be wonderful to wave a magic wand and make everyone well," said Blanksma, "but sometimes the only treatement for these things is time."

Winter Happening begins next Saturday

HOPE - Presentations, performances and athletic events will all be part of this year's annual Hope College Winter Happening on Saturday, Feb. 18.

Among the events and activities scheduled for the day are three seminars concerning contemporary topics, the college's popular "Rendezvous with History," which includes musical entertainment and a men's varsity basketball game in the Holland Civic Center.

The event is sponsored by the college's Alumni Association. Except for the basketball game and the Winter Happening luncheon, admission to all events is free.

The three seminars, featuring presentations by Hope faculty members, will be given concurrently at 10 a.m. The locations of the seminars will be available on the day of the event at the Winter Happening registration desk in the DeWitt Center Collegiate lounge.

Robert Thompson, assistant professor of music, and John Shea, part-time lecturer of music, will present "The Art of Jazz: a Listener's Guide," combining lecture and demonstration in an informative, enjoyable survey of jazz styles, composers and songs. Thompson and Shea will discuss and perform jazz pieces from the '30s through the '70s, including works by composers George Gershwin, Cole Porter and Duke Ellington.

Dr. Sander Dellaha, associate professor of German and the college's instructor in Russian, will speak on "Poland in Crisis." Dellaha will discuss the impact of Glasnost on Poland, examining dynamics such as labor unions, political parties and the church. Dellaha visited both Poland and the Soviet Union while living in Europe last year.

Dr. Jacob Nyenhuis, professor of classics and provost at Hope, will present "From Myth to Reality: the Flight of Daedalus." Nyenhuis will use a slide show to help illustrate the manner in which ancient myth and modern technology became intertwined when teams of engineers, physicists and cycling champions reproduced the man-powered flight of Greek legend. In the classical myth, the inventor Daedalus fashioned a pair of wings from wax and feathers to escape slavery on the island of Crete. In April 1988, Daedalus' namesake, a pedal-driven aircraft piloted by a Greek bicyclist, duplicated the feat in its 73-mile flight. Dr. Nyenhuis was with the Daedalus team in Greece, acting as an expert on the myth.

At 11:15 a.m. in Wichers Auditorium, a dramatic portrayal of personalities from different periods in history will be staged by Hope faculty members. This year's "Rendezvous with History" is entitled "Great Nonconformists." Moderated by David James, director of the college's writing center, the program is an approach to understanding the past.

This year's participants will be (Martin Luther) Dr. Dennis Vokuhl, professor of religion; (George Fox) Dr. Donald Cronkle, professor of biology; (Emily Dickenson) Sandra Alapach, assistant professor of communication; (Mother Teresa of Calcutta) Dr. Robin Klay, associate professor of economics and business administration; and (Isadora Duncan) Mary Linda Graham Fallon, assistant professor of dance.

During the luncheon in the Maas Center auditorium, which begins at 12:30 and costs $5.75 per person, professors George Kraft and Roberta Kraft will perform "The Magic of Rodgers and Hammerstein." The Krafts will bring old favorites to life in their costumed presentation, recalling the work of artists responsible for the popular melodies of "Oklahoma" and "The Sound of Music."

The Krafts gave more than 40 concerts in secular or sacred music in 1988. Dr. George Kraft is a professor of physical education and chairperson of the department of physical education and athletics. Roberta Kraft is a part-time lecturer of music at Hope.

Another highlight of the day will be the men's varsity basketball game against Adrian College's varsity team in an MIAA league match-up in the Holland Civic Center at 3 p.m. Halftime will feature a free throw shooting contest involving spectators.

A limited number of general admission game tickets are available for persons attending other Winter Happening events. Advanced registration is recommended for the seminars and luncheon. For further information, call the Hope College Public Relations Office at 394-7880.

Hope to hold blood drive on Feb. 21

by Carol Ormaby
anchor feature editor

It's on your radio and television, in your newspapers and magazines. "Give to the Red Cross. The life you save could be your own. You've heard the slogan so often that you are immune to it. It's a simple slogan, and it asks for something that doesn't cost anything: a pint of blood.

Otta County Red Cross has the job of collecting 550 units of blood a day. This amount is only for basic daily needs at hospitals; it doesn't account for any emergency situation. If the Red Cross does not meet its quota, emergency blood drives may need to be scheduled.

When blood drives are scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 21, in the Maas Center Auditorium from 9:30 to 3:30. The goal for the spring blood drive is 150 units.

The next blood drive, sponsored by Red Cross and Alpha Phi Omega, is scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 21, in the Maas Center Auditorium from 9:30 to 3:30. The goal for the spring blood drive is 150 units.

"Give to the Red Cross. The life you save could be your own."

A simple slogan. The simple truth.
Renovation project on schedule

The renovation project of Van Zoeren and VanderWerf Halls is on schedule, according to Tom Renner, director of the public relations department.

The construction will be finished during January 1989, its original completion date, pending approval by the fire marshal, Renner said.

The expansion of the halls will provide more space for some academic departments and the Academic Support Center, new classrooms, lecture halls, laboratories and faculty offices are being added.

Renner reported the following plan of the project:

Van Zoeren Hall will be completed in early May. The physics, mathematics and computer science faculty will move temporarily into Van Zoeren's second floor while parts of VanderWerf will be renovated during the fall semester of the 1989-90 school year.

The connecting link between the two halls and the new entrance to Van Zoeren will be finished in mid-August. The connecting link will have new classrooms, laboratories, a lecture hall, seminar rooms and a student lounge.

The economics-business administration and education departments will be in Van Zoeren when the school year starts. The education department will be on the second floor and the economics-business departments will be on the first floor.

Parts of VanderWerf, primarily the first floor lecture halls, will be finished before the new school year starts. The entire hall will be completed during November.

Between semesters, the physics, math and computer science departments will return to VanderWerf while the sociology department and Academic Support Center will move into Van Zoeren's second floor. Everyone will be in their new quarters when the second semester begins.

The exterior of the halls is also being redone to update their 1960's architecture, the decade when they were built, Renner said.

Renner said he senses enthusiasm among people on campus, particularly the faceted members moving into the renovated halls, who have been cramped inside smaller buildings.

3.8 million dollars has already been spent on this 4.85 million dollar project, Renner said. He said there is "no question" the debt will be paid off, due to the college's history of alumni contributing money.

"This is kind of a renaissance," Renner said. "When it's done, people are going to say 'Wow'."

Black History Month is a connection to the past

by Samantha Gano
Special to the anchor

As a black student on a white campus, Black History Month for me means a connection with the past. It is a connection to the great Black men and women that don't appear or appear very briefly in history text books. It gives me a feeling of pride. I can say I'm proud to be Black, because I can look back and see what my people have done. Their accomplishments, their feats and their courage are ingrained in my memory. These Black men and women paved the way for me. They are my role models.

Many times all our white counterparts see is our struggles from slavery and our rebellion during the Civil Rights Movement. But what about the work that our ancestors did before this? What about the achievements we have made in this country? How much has been neglected in history books?

Black History Month opens the door into the past, so that we can say, "Look at our accomplishments that benefit America, acknowledge and learn what is neglected in history books." It is our way to pay tribute to those before us. If it had not been for them we might not be where we are now. It is our way of educating our children, so they can pass on the history of these Black men and women's lives. It is our way of saying we have not forgotten where we came from as we look ahead into the future. Slavery did not bind us. We are strong people and with that strength we went out into the world and made life easier for ourselves and those to come after us. It is the history text books that keep us suspended in time from slavery to civil rights. There are books full of our heroes and heroines, yet these are unknown.

Black History Month is the key to unlock our rich heritage and history. If only for a month, our place in the shaping of America is acknowledged.
Van Sertima speaks on presence of Africans in ancient America

by Mpine Qakisa
anchor staff writer

There is not a single major civilization in this world that is not influenced, according to Dr. Ivan Van Sertima.

Speaking at Hope College on Friday night for part of the National Black History Month events and activities, Van Sertima talked about the presence of Africans in America before Columbus set his foot on the new world, "It's sad to discover the physical presence of people," Dr. Van Sertima who gave a lecture that was accompanied by slides that depicted giant stoneheads, boats used for navigation, Wars glowing the correct latitudinal and longitudinal co-ordinates between Africa and America.

"All this evidence indicates the presence of Africans in America long before Columbus set his foot on the new world," he said.

Adding to that he said that the first fossilized head with African type features was found by Mexican peasants in 1858. He explained that that discovery is more documented in the Olmec world, "The evidence was there, but nobody could put it together," he added.

Talking about the ships used 100 years before Christ to cross the Atlantic, he told the audience that it was demonstrated in 1969 when a reed boat was made and crossed from a North African seaport to the Caribbean "without steering" using the Africa-America currents.

"This evidence was also affirmed by the Chinese when they told us about the transportation of elephants during that period," he added.

Another thing that was found, according to Van Sertima, were hieroglyphic symbols with the same shape and meaning amid African types of the period.

"The duplication of African and American cultures was found in words used that meant the same thing in Mexico and Egypt," he explained.

Van Sertima said that not only words but pyramids, furnaces and other things that were so identical that "only an expert could tell them apart" were discovered.

"The idea that we have about the new world," he said, "is that all cultures were influenced which were not as geographical isolated as America before Columbus discovered it.

"We talk about Western civilization, they don't talk about semi or little but we talk about the depth of civilization," he added.

He told the audience that if it is like that with Western civilization why can't it be like that with African or American civilization.

He said that during his travel expenditures in Europe, he found places where people didn't have or use showers "partly because not all Europe was civilized."

"Most anthropologists," Van Sertima said "are fascinated by queer people, making kingship maps, checking out cultures, religions, social lives, studying people like monkeys."

"When dealing with Africa as diseased, oppressed and poor everybody gets excited, but when we tell them it's a myth," he commented.

"Science and technology in Africa existed long before slave trade," Dr. Van Sertima said.

He said that it was founded that steel smelting in Tanzania 2,000 years ago used sophisticated techniques in achieving high temperatures.

He also mentioned that in 300 B.C., the astronomical observatory was one of the most accurate and in the 13th century the Dogon astronomers discovered a "star impossible to see with the naked eye" as well as an orbit on its axis, a fact that was known three years ago in modern astronomy.

Among one of the books Van Sertima edited is the Blacks and Science, dealing with medicines, vaccines, surgery and antisepsics used by Africans of the period.

"How could Africans do this when they are so primitive?" he asked.

"But said that his books are an attempt to shift anthropological focus away from the primitive periphery to the center of African civilization."

"Partial truth is worse than a lie," he emphasized, for a long time no positive image has been given Africa.

"Marvelous Egypt has its roots in Africa," he said, even though Egypt is no longer considered part of Africa.

"Africa is a shattered dynamos," Van Sertima said.

Burned bits and pieces of African as well as American history.

Forensic team competes at Wheaton

HOPE - Members of the Hope College Forensic Association defeated the debate team ofAdolphus College, North Dakota State University and South Dakota State University. They lost rounds to Macalester College, University of Illinois Urbana and Trinity College. The team's record of 3 wins and 3 losses tied them with 10 other teams to be eligible for final elimination competition. However, their speaker ratings failed to make the cut-off.

Gloria Moser, a junior at Wheaton, accompanied the team as timekeeper.

Coach Sandy Alapach, professor of communication at Hope, was especially pleased with the team's performance since this was the first college debate tournament for both students. Both debaters previously competed for the Wheaton forensic association in individual speaking events.

The debate division of the association plans to enter the Marquette "Bride of Frankenstei"n tournament on Feb. 10-11.

At that meet, the team debaters will be joined by individual debaters (Lincoln-Douglas style) who are preparing arguments on the issue of changing the presidential election process.

Baylor pie man returns

(CPS) -- Baylor University's Pie Man, or someone just like him, has returned.

A long-haired man recently barged into a business class, ran up to student Jim Wyatt, and hit him in the face with a pie.

"I was just sitting in class looking at my notes when I heard this guy say 'hey,' and then I looked up into a pie," Wyatt recalled.

When Wyatt left class to clean up, he was pied again in the restroom.

Meanwhile, back in the classroom, the Pie Man stuck his head into the room and yelled, "Hey, Gina, you're next," to another student, Prof. Leslie Rasner reported.

In a scene out of a TV cop show, several class members bolted up to chase the assailant. One student, Steve Spoonemore, managed to jump into the Pie Man's getaway car, but eventually had to roll out of it while fighting for his life.

The Pie Man and a woman companion in the car were screaming at him and hitting him, Spoonemore said.

It wasn't the first time habitues of the Waco, Texas, campus had pied this school year. Several students and professors were pied in classes during first semester, but Baylor spokesman Dr. James Baker reports that the first semester Pie Man has been apprehended and punished through normal disciplinary channels.

The pie massacre in Rasner's class, he concluded, had to be the work of different people.

Pie attacks were common on many campuses in the early eighties, when the weapons of choice seemed to be cream or berry pies. Professors at Michigan State University and University of Colorado were victimized, as was the dean of students at the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

Celebrities visiting campuses in those days had to be careful too. William F. Buckley, New York Sen. Daniel Moynihan, anti-abortionist Phyllis Schlafly, former Ohio Gov. James Rhodes, Watergate conspirators E. Howard Hunt and G. Gordon Liddy, artist Andy Warhol, anti-gay rights activist and singer Anita Bryant and former CIA Director William Colby all were pied at various schools during the period.

Reactions to Baylor's pie reviled varied.

Original victim Wyatt laughed it off, noting "It tasted pretty good."

Yet Gina Gee, the second student threatened during the incident, was "really upset."

Teacher Rasner was not amused. "If I had a deadly weapon, I would use it in my defense. It is embarrassing. It is degrading. This just should not go on in a university. It is part of a joke."
Epidemics aren't cured overnight

With the recent flu epidemic, rumors about the Hope College Health Clinic seem to have multiplied exponentially. Students who have been ill with the flu will testify that they were forced to wait in long lines at the clinic only to be told that bed rest is the best remedy for their illnesses. Other students mention previous incidents involving the health clinic, where students were “misdiagnosed” or given incorrect medication and-or improper treatment.

While there is no simple answer to these problems, one thing is certain; there is a communication gap between the health clinic and the student body of Hope College.

Students who go to the health clinic looking for a “quick fix” are bound to be disappointed. The problem here is that the health clinic is looked upon as inferior to a medical doctor’s practice, but is nonetheless expected to provide immediate results. No one goes to the doctor expecting to be immediately cured of the flu or strep throat or any other illness, but that is exactly what happens at the health clinic.

Also, students have to realize that the health clinic, while it is a medical facility, is designed primarily as an educational, preventive center, rather than as a family medical practice or a pharmacy. The staff at the health clinic does not have all the resources available that a community hospital may have, and so the clinic is forced to operate on a different level entirely.

However, the health clinic’s recent decision to send a memo around campus advising students infected with the flu virus to stay at home was perhaps the wrong method for the clinic to use in dealing with informing the student body. The memo was meant to imply that since the flu is a virus, bed rest and fluids are the only true remedies. However, in sending the memo, the health clinic made it seem as though they were unconcerned with the welfare of students who were ill.

While the health clinic was obviously poorly equipped to handle an influenza epidemic of this proportion, the clinic normally services nearly 4000 students a semester. Students should recognize that the health clinic does its best with what it has. They should also realize that a large medical facility would not be practical at a college the size of Hope, and that a “quick fix” for the flu is just not possible.

Chair explains Fantasia security need

Dear Editor,

I would like to use your column to express to those who purchased legitimate Fantasia tickets my apologies for having to subject them to the indignities of our security measures last Friday evening. We found such procedures necessary, however, to reduce the number of “crashers” at the event. Although those who try to attend without a ticket attest to the fun of the event and am sure intend no harm, they jeopardize the future of Fantasia.

If many people plan to crash we simply cannot sell as many tickets. SAC needs not only the revenue to cover the costs of the event, but also the high numbers of people to secure the ballrooms. Fantasia is a small affair from the perspective of the hotel, which has conventions that use hundreds of rooms and generate far more income than does Fantasia. For them to allow us to use both ballrooms, we must be able to guarantee that they will be selling as many dinners that night as the capacity of the rooms will allow. We cannot afford to guarantee them a payment of that size unless we have sold all tickets. SAC will unfortunately have to hire security people next year as well, although presently being devised are better procedures which will both decrease the time and waiting in line and better preserve the spirit of the occasion.

I would also like to mention that SAC will have great difficulty in responding to the demand for dance-only tickets. If many people were to buy dance-only tickets, we would probably be unable to sell all the whole-event tickets, leaving us unable to secure the use of the hotel’s ballrooms. We will sell dance-only tickets next year only if we feel reasonably confident that we will be able to sell all 425 whole-event tickets.

Finally, although $35 seem expensive, that amount does not even cover the cost of the meals and ballroom rentals, which cost $26 per couple. Your activities fee pays for the balance of the meal, the entertainment, the posters, the invitations, and the ticket materials. The 200 plus hours of labor given by volunteers was, of course, free.

Many thanks to all who worked on Winter Fantasia 1989.

Sincerely,
David W. Lowry, Chairperson
SAC – Formal Committee

Student explains Gay and Lesbian Student Union

Dear Editor,

In case you haven't seen one of the blue flyers that were liberated around campus during the second week of this semester, The Hope College Gay and Lesbian Student Union is re-organizing for 1989, and, as always, is extending an invitation to all gay and lesbian students to join.

The H.C.G.L.S.U. is a non-fficial group that has had a history dating back to the 1970s. A good way to think of it is a fraternity-sorority for Gays. Though this analogy may ruffle the feathers of some, it is valid. We have pledging, a rough, leam-as-you-go tutorial in feigning interest in the opposite sex, repressing original thoughts, building walls between yourself and others by monitoring every single word you say and never quite trusting them, laughing at and even calling 'fake' jokes - all this c ourtesy of our 'pledgemasters' -- parents, friends, teachers, T.V., and 'pledgemasters* -- parents, friends, teachers, T.V., and culture in general. After all this frustration, we offer a chance to 'rush,' or meet other Gays and see if you like them.

Trust me: you will. In all of my many experiences of meeting people who join, there is an immediate, affirming recognition, similarities of interests, experiences, thinking and outlooks on life. Everything needed to start a friendship. Not to say that all Gays are like all other people -- just that after the oppressive environment that is Hope College has been lifted, and we can be ourselves, you will find that the person behind those glancing eyes actually has a brain as just as relaxed as you are to be in a place where censureship is necessary.

Formally, the group meets about five times each semester. After that, friendships have developed to the point where meetings just happen, rather than being planned in advance. In past years, for meetings we have watched movies, and had speakers, like Dr. Boulton from the Religion department; Terry Wisser, an ARC patients and AIDS prevention activist; and Dr. Dickie from the Psychology Dept. (All of them were invited only after every member agreed.)

The people to see for more details are Dr. Wayne Boulton (Religion), Dr. Jane Bach (English), Rev. Gerry VanHeest (Chapel), or go to the counseling center. None of these people will give your name to anyone without your permission. If you feel you want to join, you will be given my name, and I, yours. After we meet you may decide whether you wish to join. Should you decide not to, I will not give your name to anyone. In fact, if you were a student last year, I do not have your name, so think about coming again!

Many thanks,
Name and Address withheld by request

SLIP OF THE MIND

Rusted bridges

JIM MONNETT

The morning of Winter Fantalast year a group of my friends gathered with me in our suit and dresses to lead a memorial service in Chapel for our friend Loren. Loren had passed away the Sunday before after three years of fighting bone cancer. For most of us it was the first time we had known anyone who had cancer. It was also the first time a close friend had died.

They say time heals all wounds. That may be so, but they also say that the scars remain.

For me I don't want to forget Loren. Last week I let myself miss him as much as I did that first night when three of us had to round up all of Loren's and our friends to break the news. It seemed even harder to tell people because every was dreading that inevitable time.

Time may heal the wounds so that I can go on with the living, but sometimes it's better to slip back into my mind and remember everything that is Loren. I'm not trying to be morbid, but as I wandered my memories of him, I was struck by a few thoughts that maybe you should be struck with too even if you didn't know Loren or someeone like him.

Loren used to tell me sometimes "There's so much more I want to do." He knew that God had a plan for him and was using his cancer but he never saw what the plan was. None of us did. Loren trusted in God though to give him the strength to get through the hard times even when he could see no good

Looking back I still wish I could say that I too have "so much more I want to do." But I can't. I don't have many mountains that I want to climb. After watching Loren struggle I wish I could say that I gained a direction to those mountains that he saw. It doesn't work that way though.

What I do have is a bunch of bridges. Loren had mountains to climb in his future, but in his pre-sept he built bridges. Bridges between people. There were about ten to fifteen people in Loren's immediate circle of friends. We did an awful lot together and built a lot of bridges. At his memorial service
I saw so many more bridges that he built with personal people who might have opened a door for him as he came on his one leg and crutches or maybe he opened door or two for them.

A year has passed and I look back at the bridges that I shared with him. Our main group of friends has split in different directions. Some moved into Phelps. Some of us moved out.
But we still had our bridges.
We were still friends. Good friends.

But somewhere we forgot about a part of Loren. We let the bridges rust. There is nothing so horrible to me sitting here today as those corroded friendships that have aged from disuse.

There is still a link across the gulf, but it's sagging. It needs some oil.

OFF THE CUFF

Listlessness

ERIC SHOTWELL

Are you one of those compulsive list-makers? I know I am.

Almost every morning, I sit down and write out a list of things
I have to do that day. Or, if I'm feeling really ambitious, I write down my plans for the entire week. I figure that list-making keeps me from forgetting and procrastinating.

Usually my lists consist of homework I have to do, people I have to call and errands I have to run. But something inevitably happens somewhere between making out my list and actually completing any of the tasks I've listed.

Occasionally, I do finish everything I've set out to do in day. Most of the time, though, I lose the list, or it gets misplaced on my desk. Then I either have to clean off the desk, or make a new list. And it's usually much easier just to start from scratch.

Sometimes, I'll spend so much time making lists that I don't have time to do anything on them. The nice things about the whole system, though, is that even if I misplace my list and find it again a month later, most of the items on it still have to be finished, so it's not even obsolete. When the list has finished itself, the people I should have called have called me, the errands I had to run are no longer necessary, and the method gets done five minutes before class.

Like many compulsive list-makers, I have a problem:
procrastinating. Sometimes I just can't stand the thought of writing? I asked. She showed me. It was a huge list of things to do, nearly two pages in length. I was amazed.

In fact, that experience convinced me that I'd be a lot better off if I kept my lists short. Now I just write "Things to do: Make list" and leave it at that.

I never get anything done, but it saves a lot of time that way.

lthy the same thing. I sat next to a fellow list-maker in British Literature last semester, for example. "What's that you're writing?" I asked. She showed
me. It was a huge list of things to

WHEN TOW V
There were long lines at the door due to the checking of tickets and the stamping of hands with fluorescent ink. The Amway Grand Hotel requested that SAC purchase security for the evening.

The band Jady Current provided what seemed an endless array of dance tunes for the crowd in the Ambassador Ballroom, who were more than happy to participate.

Hansel jokes, tells stories, advocates joy

by Jim Monnett
anchor Entertainment Editor

"Joy is a choice," insisted Tim Hansel when he spoke in Dimnent Chapel on Monday in a lecture sponsored by the Counseling Center.

Using many jokes and anecdotes, Hansel told the audience about how sacred life is and how special everyone is to God and to each other. Wearing a baseball cap with ears, he said that people have to stop taking themselves so seriously.

"Children are fresh from God," Hansel said, "I encourage all of us to be a little child-like every now and then... If you miss out on the fun of life, you miss out on life."

Offering some practical advice, Hansel listed and explained four ways to contentment. 1. Slow down: and take the time to enjoy life. 2. Live in the here and now. 3. It takes practice (try just practicing being grateful). 4. Thou shalt not take thyself too seriously.

Hansel stressed that the only way the world was going to get to know Him was through Christians. And if the world sees joy in a Christian's life then it is going to see God.

One way toward choosing joy is through laughter, Hansel said. "We will be known by our laughter by our love and by our lives." Christians should be "called the most joyful people in the world."

Joy, though, Hansel said, is not like happiness which is from good circumstances. Joy just defies circumstances. "Joy is your responsibility," Hansel explained. "No one can give it to you but God Himself. But you have to choose it."

Some Christians spend their lives just being good, Hansel thought. They worry too much about how they appear and not enough about being joyful.

"Joy is untidy, it's messy," Hansel said. To demonstrate he called a woman from the audience and put his hands on her ears as he asked the audience to do the same with the person sitting next to them. Then he said to mess up the other person's hair as a demonstration of how messy something fun and joyful can be.

A key to discovering joy is to admit that life is difficult. Hansel told about an accident he had some years ago when he fell six stories into a crevasse and broke "nearly everything below the neck." He said it was a miracle that he recovered his health even though he lives in chronic pain and fatigue. But through his pain he learned deep joy.

"Pain and joy run together," Hansel explained. "Some people never learn true joy because they spend their entire life trying to avoid pain."

In the end Hansel defined joy as "that deep settled confidence that says God is in my life. And on the other side of the desk, Griffith, working hard to move onto the other side of the desk. Griffith, who received the Golden Globe Award for Best Comic Actress, carried the film because she was in all but two scenes. She was essential to play the character of Tess because Tess needed to be fresh on the screen. Although Griffith has been in several films before, she normally plays a wild, loose type of woman. Griffith displays her versatility as an actress in "Working Girl" because she convincingly plays an ambitious, yet sincere and naive character.

Another asset to the film was Sigourney Weaver. Although Weaver was not in the film nearly as much as Griffith, her supporting role was effective and enjoyable. Weaver played Kathleen Parker, the boss who everyone fears they will have. Parker's ruthless and unethical practices were enraging to watch. When Parker stole ideas from her secretary, McGill, I began to question whether or not powerful established businesspersons ever let the "little people" make it.

The main issue addressed in the film is women in the workforce. Traditionally women have had to work twice as hard as men to earn respect, pride, and dignity. With the current women's rights movement, many think this is not true anymore. But with movies such as "Working Girl," we are shown that society has not progressed much. McGill was a bright, hardworking woman, but every time she took someone's help trying to move up and land a job with higher standing, it was a set-up. The people who supposedly were helping Tess were just sending her to powerful men for "dates." McGill refused to get ahead by compromising herself as a woman.

By looking at the two women in the film, appearances would warrant that McGill was using her femininity to get what she wanted. Interestingly, it was the classy looking Parker who used her feminine wiles to make business strides.

The featured male character in the film was Jack Trainer, played by Harrison Ford. The role was more subtle than Ford's normal adventurous Indiana Jones. I think that Ford did a good job playing Trainer, but McGill was such a strong character that she only needed a small amount of support. Trainer was the weakest of the main characters. I think that the filmmaker intentionally made the character weaker because he was a male and the film focused on the female characters at a more emotional and developmental level.

Are females more aggressive the ultimate pursuit on their way to the top? Do females need men to succeed? Do women have to work twice as hard in order to gain respect and pride in the workforce? These questions are examined, although not answered in "Working Girl."
'Det. Harry Crumb' is crowd-pleaser

by Carol Ormsby
anchor feature editor

To answer the question that the movie's title poses, Harry Crumb is the most inept detective since the bumbling inspector Clouseau.

John Candy stars as Harry Crumb, descendant of Crumb and Crumb, famous detectives. The family business has fallen under control of Eliot Dreiser, played by Jeff Jones (Ferris Bueller's Day Off, Beetlejuice). Dreiser has filed Harry Crumb away in the Midwest. But the beautiful daughter of P.J. Downing has been kidnapped, and there is no available detective at Crumb and Crumb. So Dreiser sends for Harry, while reassuring Downing, "He's better than good. He's a Crumb."

Harry sets out to solve the case, and poor, accident-prone Harry is lucky he doesn't kill himself. Aided by Downing's other daughter, Nikki (Shawnee Smith), Harry spies on the main suspect, Nikki's stepmother Helen (Annie Potts). But Helen and her boyfriend Vince are eager to find out the kidnappers plans, because they want to kill Downing before the kidnappers get all his money. The tension builds as we find out that Harry was assigned to the case because he wasn't supposed to solve it.

"Who's Harry Crumb" is a wonderful comedy filled with loads of visual humor. From Harry being sucked through the air conditioning vent to getting stuck in a jockey-sized phone booth, the laughs keep coming. Other comic gems of the movie included some wonderful scenes with Tim, the world's laziest butler. In addition, there were also some delightful cameos by Saturday Night Live alumnus Jim Belushi and Joe Flaherty, one of Candy's sidekicks from SCTV.

As Harry accidentally solves the mystery, he entertains the audience with his slapstick humor. Harry Crumb is a detective. "Harry Crumb" is a crowd-pleaser.

and we have a winner!

A winner has finally been picked for the third semi-occasional anchor Caption Contest. Although there were many entries, two stood out as being above the rest. Honorable mention goes to David DeBoer, for his caption to the above picture:
"This is the last time we let our roommates pimp us for Fantasia!"

First place honors, and a pair of two tickets to the Quad 31 seven-screen theatre go to Matt Vonk, for the caption:
"I agreed to wear her shorts, if she would go for the leather collar and chain thing."

Thanks to all those who entered. Look for another anchor caption contest in an upcoming issue! Congratulations Matt!

Hope women defeat MIAA's No. 2 K-zoo

by Scott A. Kaukonen

anchor staff writer

Balance. The Kalamazoo College women's basketball team arrived in town Wednesday evening, sitting in an unexpected MIAA second-place position. They brought with them Laura Behling who was on the verge of becoming the MIAA's all-time leading scorer. She added 22 points to her total against the Dutch, but she and her teammates left the same way Kalamazoo had a few nights earlier.

Balance. Despite a squad that resembles a M-A-S-H unit, containing one person. This past week, the Dutch prepared for a pair of their biggest victories, edging Kalamazoo, 69-62, and smashing Albion, 87-57.

Against Kalamazoo, the Dutch beat the Hornets out of the blocks, breaking to a 10-2 lead in the opening minutes. After a pair of K-zoo buckets, Hope spurted again. An 11-2 Dutch run which was capped by a Kristen Roeters layup after she had faced a K-zoo player twice at the other end gave the Dutch a 21-8 advantage. Some sloppy play late in the half let the Hornets stay in the game, but the Dutch still entered the locker room with a comfortable 28-18 lead.

The second half found Kalamazoo kept at an arm's length throughout. When Dina Disney hit the set of her fourth 3-pointers from somewhere between the railroad tracks and Lincoln Street, the Dutch were leading by 13 minutes to play.

Three-and-a-half minutes later, the lead had shrunk to seven, as free throws became the order of the day. Keyed by Roeters play inside and performance of Graves in the game, the Dutch surged again and looked ready to cruise, 63-48, with 5 minutes remaining. But K-zoo's Laura Behling took charge scoring 11 points down the stretch. K-zoo was within six points with 1:30 left, but Hope held on to win 69-62.

Scoring leaders were Roeters (17), Disney (16), and Anna Maria Postmus (13). Lisa Nienhuis, Holly Vandenbarg and Postmus each had seven rebounds, while Amy Warriner assisted on five hoops.

The Dutch defensive pressure forced Albion into numerous turnovers as the Britons were unable to set their offense. The Dutch couldn't quite match their first-half proficiency, but Disney, with a little help from Roeters, provided the entertainment with a passing clinic that had the audience shaking their heads. When the smoke cleared and the weapons were put away, the Dutch had slaughtered Albion, 87-57.

Balance again was the key for the Dutch. Roeters led the way with 18 points. Disney (14), Nienhuis (12), Warriner (10), and Vandenbarg (10), all hit double-figures. Disney dished out 9 assists and Nienhuis added six. Vandenbarg, Robin Schout and Heidi Carigon controlled the boards with 6, 5 and 5, respectively.

Hope now turns its attention to Calvin on Wednesday night in Grand Rapids. Need more be said? On Saturday, the 11th, Hope will clash at the Dow with league-leaders Alma, whose only loss was at the hands of the Dutch.

In the Crease

Carson needed

The big news all week long has been the proposed trade of Detroit Red Wings forwards Bob Probert, Petr Klima and Adam Graves to the Edmonton Oilers for centerman Jimmy Carson.

The trade has existed as a rumor for quite some time, but it came down to the wire this week. By including 20-year-old center Postmus each had seven rebounds, while Amy Warriner assisted on five hoops. The Dutch was home against an expected win, but Probert and forward Kevin McClelland.

One problem with the deal is that players like Probert and Klima can come back to haunt the Wings if you trade them. But neither is really helping the Wings right now anyway, so they might as well be traded.

Another problem is that Probert has said he doesn't want to leave and that he'll do whatever the Red Wings want him to do to get back on the team. Probert says he doesn't believe his drinking is a major problem and that he wants to stay in Detroit because that's where his family and friends are.

These are exactly the reasons why a trade would benefit the Wings and Probert himself. Probert is generally described as a nice guy with a drinking problem. Trouble is, Probert doesn't see himself as having a problem. His friends generally don't help him much either. Getting Probert drunk is something they consider fun. Other times they'll buy him a beer just to be nice. A change in scenery may be just what Probert needs to get his life back together.

The Arcadian fraternity took on the Grand Rapids Media All-Stars at West Ottawa High School on Jan. 31. The charity game was set up to help Scott Bramer, a student of West Ottawa in need of a liver transplant.

Bill Meenks

The addition of Carson would be a good move for the Wings as it would give them two dangerous scoring lines to go along with their checking game. Carson has scored 41 goals already this year and was a 50 goal scorer last year. He has made it no secret he'd like to play in Detroit, since he grew up in nearby Grosse Pointe.

By acquiring Carson, the Wings could also lighten the load on Steve Yzerman who has been averaging over 30 minutes a game this season. Yzerman has been double shifted and plays on both the power-play and penalty-killing units. By having another scoring center, the Wings could ease up on Yzerman.

Siedentop to lecture on 'Sport in American Life' Thursday

OPH - Dr. Daryl Siedentop, professor of physical education at Ohio State University, will spend Thursday, Feb. 9, on the Hope College campus.

Dr. Siedentop, a 1960 Hope graduate, will present two public lectures, one at 11 a.m. and the other at 8 p.m., both in Winants Auditorium in Graves Hall. The public is invited. Admission is free.

During the 11 a.m. lecture, "Sport in American Life: Faith Seeks Understanding," Dr. Siedentop will examine the individual and collective importance of sports in American culture. During the 8 p.m. address, "America's Schools: Problems and Prospects," he will examine the major problems confronting America's school system as it approaches the 21st century, examining particularly the goals America's schools should serve and how those goals might be achieved.

Dr. Siedentop will also speak before two Hope education classes.

An internationally known scholar in sport pedagogy, Dr. Siedentop is the author of nine texts, many of which are used widely in the United States and abroad and several of which have been translated into Japanese.

Dr. Siedentop coordinates the teacher education program in physical education at Ohio State University, and his research program in the behavioral analysis of instruction and supervision has won international recognition.

In 1984, he was awarded the prestigious "Juan Antonia Samaranch Award" for his research in sport pedagogy. The internationally juried award was presented to him by Mr. Samaranch, the president of the International Olympic Committee, at the 1984 Olympic Scientific Congress.

Women drown Albion, prepare for Kalamazoo

by Bill Meenings anchor sports editor

The Hope College women's swim team defeated Albion 127-87 Saturday, setting up a showdown tonight against co-league leader Kalamazoo.

The women stand 7-0 overall, and 4-0 in the conference. For the women, Shelly Russell has qualified for nationals with a time of 5:10.44 in the 500 yard, and 100 yard butterfly with times of 2:16.34, and 1:01.43 respectively.

If Hope defeats Kalamazoo tonight, they will be in good shape to win their 10th consecutive MIAA championship. The league championship meet is Feb. 23-25 at Albion College.

Men's swim team in winning form Saturday

by Bill Meenings anchor sports editor

The men's swim team defeated Albion 83-78 to the Britons of Albion last Saturday. The men are tonight at Kalamazoo, on the other hand, in a game that put Hope's men against Calvin with a 5-2 MIAA mark - 13-5 overall - and trail the first place Knights 7-0.

On the Write Track: Is your writing reader-friendly?

Have you ever been on the outside of an inside joke? I'll bet most of us have occasionally had the frustrating experience of trying to carry on a conversation with others who seem to delight in knowing something we don't know. The incomprehensible giggles and mysterious meaningful glances are just maddening, aren't they?

Sometimes well-meaning papers give their readers the same lost feeling. The writer seems to know what he or she is writing. It's nice when we are told directly who our audience should be, but professors don't always state it so clearly. It's tempting and often true to think that they know more about the topic than we do, but this doesn't mean we don't need to explain anything. The professor could have checked out a library book on the topic, but instead he wants to know your response to it. Don't write as if the reader is totally ignorant, of course, but give her a chance to really understand what you have to say. No two people will find exactly the same meaning in a given source. When writing a paper you have a unique opportunity to share your viewpoint with someone else. Even a strict research paper is your own compilation of the facts. Take advantage of the chance you're being given and make sure that the reader won't miss a single key part of what you're presenting.

Imagine you have to rate two people after interviews. The first person was obviously intelligent but his speech was so slow and wordy that it just bored you. The second person was also intelligent and proved this fact by identifying with you, the interviewer, and talking directly to you with well-chosen words and clear illustrations. Which person would gain your respect and the better job? It has been three years since our first date. Two and a half of those years we've been separated. How our love has held strong through those years I can't explain except for the grace of God.

It has been three years since our first date. Two and a half of those years we've been separated. How our love has held strong through those years I can't explain except for the grace of God.

Today, as we mark our three year anniversary, I send you my love with a prayer of thanksgiving. HAPPY ANNIVERSARY. Love always, Barry.

Donna,
Two months ago, we pledged our love to each other as you accepted my proposal of marriage. We've shared this news with family and friends. They welcomed us with their understanding and support for our plans. Our love has lasted through the many trials of separation. Even now, we still face the challenge of the miles that separate us, but today I wanted to tell you that I love you very much and my thoughts and prayers are of you, always.
