Harris to visit Hope as Woodrow Wilson lecturer

HOPE - LaDonna Harris, a Comanche Indian from Oklahoma and president and executive director of Americans for Indian Opportunity (AIO), will be on the Hope College campus as a Woodrow Wilson Visiting Fellow Monday through Friday, March 27-31.

Harris will present a public lecture, "The Browning of America: Its Impact on Women," at 3:30 p.m. on Wednesday, March 29, in the Ottie Room of Phelps Hall during her visit. Admission is free.

Harris will also speak to several Hope classes and meet with student and community groups. She will meet with the Holland Area Human Rights Task Force on Tuesday, March 28 and will spend Thursday, March 30 with members of the Grand Rapids Tribal Council.

Harris formed AIO in 1970 as a national advocacy organization to assist the tribes in strengthening their efforts to attain their political and economic goals. AIO orientes tribal people and educates non-Indians to the intricacy of Indians' status in the U.S. federal system.

During its history AIO has carried out major initiatives in tribal control of natural resources, in reservation environmental quality, in the development of reservation economies and in tribal governance. AIO is currently engaged in initiatives concerning the management of conflict in Indian communities, the acculturation to Indian communities of youth programs of national service organizations like the Red Cross, and the creation of discussion environments for Indians.

Harris has served in a number of national positions, including as a member of the National Council on Indian Opportunity, an advisor at the Office of Economic Opportunity, an appointee to the U.S. Commission on Observance of the International Women's Year under President Gerald Ford and an appointee to the Presidential Commission on Mental Health under President James Earl Carter. She has also been a member of the National Commission on the Mental Health of Children and a member of the Board of UNESCO.

She lectures widely and works with more than 100 organizations a year on Indian issues. Harris also teaches frequently at the Washington School of the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C.

The Woodrow Wilson Visiting Fellows program brings leaders in their fields to the campuses of small liberal arts colleges for a week of classes, informal discussions with students and faculty and career counseling. By sharing their experiences, the Fellows help students to understand the relationship between academic knowledge and its practical application.

Hope to implement science improvements

HOPE -- A program Hope College will institute to improve the quality of science education at the elementary level has received $526,496 in support from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek.

Hope College will work with Holland area school districts to train current and future teachers in the content and methods of science instruction. Goals include increasing minority and female representation in the field of science, increasing both the confidence or science background that many teachers lack and the scope of these volumes was broad: everything from Russian literature and local school facilities related to the teaching of science. The program was developed through the cooperation of several organizations. "We worked very closely with people from area schools," said Dr. Nancy Sonneveldt Miller, dean for the social sciences at Hope College and one of the program's coordinators. "They helped us identify elementary science as the area we might want to deal with. Representatives of the Hope science and education faculty, local business and industry and the Holland Chamber of Commerce were also consulted."

Miller said the program will get teachers away from the textbook to an approach that is more experiment-oriented. "She noted that many teachers lack the confidence or science background that would enable them to take a more creative approach to teaching the subject, leading them to rely only on their textbooks or, worse yet, refrain from science instruction. "We're trying to improve the content - the knowledge base - and their comfort level with science," Miller said. "I think it is very positive for Hope College to be engaged in cooperative projects - especially with the schools which aim at the education and betterment of people," said Hope College President John H. Jacobson. "I believe that this area of science education is a matter of great concern nationally, and we're very pleased to be able to make a contribution to solve a national problem. I would also say that one can regard this grant as a confirmation of the academic strength of Hope College both in the natural sciences and in education," Jacobson said.

The program will be managed by a full-time coordinator under the auspices of an advisory council representing the groups involved. The Kellogg Foundation grant will fund the program's first three years with the council being responsible for identifying funding sources for the future.
WTHS radio transmitter burns out after ice storm

by Diane Tagoe
anchor staff writer

On Saturday, March 4, after operating 15 hours with a transmitter functioning at 7 percent, WTHS, 88.5 FM shut off its power for repairs.

"The ice storm on Friday, March 3, coated the antennas with ice which blocked the signal from the transmitter, reflecting the output back to the transmitter," said Ed Walters, radio consultant.

"Dissipating into the transmitter as heat, the heat caused parts in the transmitter's final power amplifier to burn out."

The abnormal transmitter readings began Friday night at 9 p.m. but the station was not shut off until Saturday at 12:20 p.m.

"I sent the station's engineer, Jovo Filipovich, finally received a phone call. "The station could have been saved $1,200 in repairs (if called earlier)," Filipovich said. "It was a result of DJ negligence."

The 1000 watt station, which normally reaches as far as Allegan and Jemison, is currently operating at 150 watts and only broadcasting within Holland city limits.

"WTHS transmitter is expected to be fixed today and the station should operate at full power by the end of the week."

Upward Bound goes for a clean shave

by Carrie Maples
anchor staff writer

Vote! It's your duty, as a member of Holland society, to be involved in the upcoming election. In a fund raiser for Upward Bound, Mayor Phil Tanis, 1967 Hope graduate, and Councilman Luciano Hernandez, Jr. are actively campaigning for each other in an effort to save their own facial hair.

For a $1 donation you can vote to see the candidate of your choice clean-shaven. The votes will be counted a Saturday, April 1, 1969 at 10 a.m. at the Holland Area Arts Center where the "winning" candidate will be shaved.

The funds being raised will be used to build-up the Upward Bound Scholarship Fund and to aid the Peace Corps in building an elementary school in Nepal.

Tickets can be bought at Upward Bound, from students and tutors in the program and at the Knickerbocker Theatre. Rick Muniz, Upward Bound Program Counselor, said, "It's a big sacrifice so I hope we raise quite a bit of money."

Not only do voters get the pleasure of seeing their favorite shaved but they may also win prizes. Just fill in your name on the back of a ticket and you're eligible to win food, tickets or gift certificates from the Quad-31, the Cutting Edge, the Holland Knickerbocker, Lokker-Rutgers, Teerman's Reader's World, Nickelodeon, Two J's Hair Salon, the Health Connection, Pizza Hut and the Village Inn.

Hope Republicans advise top party members on David Duke, student aid

by Scott A. Kaukonen
anchor staff writer

The Hope College Republicans, looking to extend their efforts beyond the election, recently took action in light of the recent election of a former Grand Dragon of the Ku Klux Klan. The candidate was elected to the Louisiana state legislature under the Republican label. Chairman of the Michigan College Republicans, Jon Vanden Heuvel, sent a letter to the Republican Party of Louisiana and to David Bollinger, the chairman of the Louisiana Republican Party.

The letter stated that "there is not room for bigotry in the United States..." and asked that Bollinger do everything in his power to prevent "anyone associated with the Ku Klux Klan" from remaining influential in the Republican Party. "There is simply no excuse for a person to represent the party of Abraham Lincoln in Louisiana or anywhere," wrote Vanden Heuvel.

The Hope Republicans also have sent letters to local, state and national representatives asking for their support of the Michigan Competitive Scholarship Program and for a wholesale clean up of the Michigan State Lottery -- specifically in the area of funds for education. More information on this issue is now available in a 30-minute video in the Hope College Republicans' library. Any student interested in the issue is encouraged to view it.

The Hope Republicans have also written to their own magazine. The second issue was released in February and included reports on Hope students at the inaugral, the transmitter, reflecting the amplifier to burn out."

Sire challenges student's beliefs

by Zan Ceeley
anchor staff writer

"Why Should Anyone Believe Anything at All?" With a title like this, Dr. James Sire, this year's Staley lecturer, hoped to question the foundation of Christian belief in his InterVarsity Christian Fellowship audience last Wednesday night.

For almost two hours, Sire challenged students to consider why they believe and what they believe. He pointed out that "we all have personal opinions," and otherwise why would we be motivated even to be in college. Even a belief based in doubt is a start, according to this noted Christian author.

Sire explained that he sees religious belief on a continuum, ranging from strongly-based religious feeling in a specific religion to vague or doubtful feelings stemming from agnosticism (the belief that we cannot know whether God exists).

He asked the students to label themselves and to try to justify the label. Because belief in religion "involves every aspect of our being," Sire felt that reasons for belief relate to many academic disciplines — especially sociology, religion, psychology, and philosophy.

The foundations of belief, Sire feels, should be addressed in a lot of different departments to allow the student a wide variety of insights into faith.

Most importantly, Sire encouraged students to justify their beliefs to themselves, not just to accept such beliefs because their parents and peers hold them. College life should allow the students to search and find some truth for themselves, Sire said, because academics supposedly allow the student to see past the confines of provincialism.

In this searching process, Sire eloquently pointed out that we are each "a single person in a sea of infinity and we float" looking for options. Sire challenged the students to investigate these questions for themselves.

However, in the end, Sire points to what he considers the true faith — Christianity: "Jesus forces us to get serious about our faith." From his personal experience and research, Sire feels that "the Christian world view does a better job at explaining (the universe) than other worldviews I know of."

Sire urged the students to look to the teachings of Jesus in the Gospels, not necessarily to the church organization, as the basis for belief investigation. He feels "we are a culture afraid of self-reflection," and that we must work to direct ourselves to such soul-searching and "not rely on others to do our thinking for us."

Finally, Sire directed students to an extensive book list to encourage them to read more about the Christian world view. His own book, The Universe Next Door, examines "the attractiveness of Christianity in comparison to other world religions."

Sire insisted that the "Christian faith should be a process from belief to knowledge."

"Why Should Anyone Believe Anything at All?" is Sire's challenge. He wants Christians to justify their faith, not just accept it.

Hope Health Clinic has 'normal load'

Flu, measles prominent this season

(CPS) — The flu bug is following measles outbreaks around to several schools nationwide, crowding infirmaries and thinning out classes.

It's been a "severe" year for various flu strains, especially among those younger than age 25, said Dr. Suzanna Gaventa of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

The three strains of flu loose on campuses — two of Type A and one of Type B — have basically the same effect on a person: high fever, dehydration, headaches and body aches, Gaventa said.

No one really knows how many students and faculty members have been laid low by the flu this season from it's not a reportable disease, Gaventa added, but big outbreaks have been reported at a number of schools, including that we University, the universities of Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Texas-Eilo Paso and Maryland-Catholic University (UMBC). Hartford and Hope colleges and Virginia Tech also report outbreaks.

"It's played havoc with my life. It was like a friend who just wouldn't go away," said Antonio Valladao, a Hope College freshman who missed nearly all of the 25 people on his dorm floor shared the malady.

"These students," observed Debbie Sivertson, health services director at the UMBC, "feel like a truck ran over them."

UMBC's outbreak was the worst in nine years, she reported, with more than 150 students seeking refuge at the infirmary in its mid-February peak.

In early March, 10-to-20 students were checking into Texas-Eilo Paso's health clinic with flu symptoms each day, leading clinic director Dr. Joseph Borchard to predict, "This is just the beginning."

The flu bugs are chasing close behind measles outbreaks on some campuses. Catawba College in North Carolina, worried about spreading measles, canceled its remaining basketball games rather than have more people jammed into a gym exposed to the disease.

Similarly, Kent State University on March 1 stopped its student nurses from going to area hospitals for fear they'd transmit the measles from their infected campus to patients.

Through early March, Long Island University's C.W. Post campus, Tabor College in Kansas, North Carolina State University and the University of Kansas, among others, reported multiple measles cases.

Happily both the measles and the flu do pass.

At Hope, health services director Sharon Blankama noted the traffic at the clinic fell "down to a normal load" soon after administrators announced they would not cancel classes for the time being.

But until it does subside, UMBC's Sivertson advises students can't do much about it except to get plenty of rest, drink a lot of fluids and indulge in hearty portions of chicken soup.

No improvement for '89 trade deficit

(AP) — A government report on last year's U.S. trade deficit could contain a cloud within a silver lining. Analysts say they think the gap between last year's imports and exports fell 12 percent from 1987's record — which was nearly 154 billion dollars. But the experts also think the improvement stalled in the fourth quarter last year. They predict 1989 will bring little or no improvement.
Students in colleges across country fight against rape

(NNSN) - To confront a problem that has long festered in the myth and misinformation, students at colleges across the country have increased their efforts in recent months to fight rape on campus.

As many as one college woman in five has been physically forced to have sexual intercourse at some date or acquaintance, though fewer than half of the victims acknowledged being "raped" according to three independent studies conducted on college campuses in 1985. This is a situation, says one student activist, that has been denied by society for years, "and now it's an epidemic."

Students have used three principal tactics to prevent rape and empower women to overcome the fear of rape. They have staged demonstrations, advocated for more administrative, student, and safety programs, and conducted educational workshops.

In response to a well-publicized "date rape" at a University of Michigan fraternity house, students at the Ann Arbor school have created a group called People Organized Against Rape (POWER) to confront rape through direct action.

"We organized around the time of the trial," explains Pam Kisch, one of the POWER organizers. "He (the alleged attacker) was acquitted, so we had a rally. There was a candlelight vigil where we went to the university president's house and to the fraternity house where it happened."

This January, four University of Michigan hockey team members were arrested for allegedly sexually harassing and threatening to attack two women. Thirty-five POWER members protested the incident and the coach's refusal to suspend the players by carrying signs into the stands of a hockey game and chanting at the coach and players.

POWER's actions have resulted in at least one lasting victory for the women at the University of Michigan. In response to protests organized by the group, the university created and funded the new Sexual Assault and Rape Prevention Center.

Another group with the acronym POWER, the People's Organization for Women's Safety and Equal Rights (POWER) at the University of California at Santa Cruz, has formed to foster education and action relating to rape. In its first year, the group has held two "Take Back the Night" marches. The marches, which have stressed the need to educate women's determination to overcome fear of rape by tak-

Western Bridge helps to cross gap between U.S. and Third World

by Carol Ormsby
anchor Feature Editor

Perhaps you've been searching for a gift for the hard-to-buy-for person, or perhaps you have a few hours a week free and you're looking for something to do. A solution to both these problems can be found at the Western Bridge on the corner of Fourteenth and College.

Western Bridge is a non-profit store specializing in Third World handicrafts. Coral jewelry, hand-carved teak animals and brass candlesticks are just a few of the items that are shipped to the store from India, Kenya, Nepal, Pakistan and other Third World countries.

These crafts are sold at Western Bridge on the basis of returning as much of the profit as possible back to the craftsman, yet are sold much cheaper than similar items in retail stores.

The store's origins go back to October of 1988, when the Bogart family held a handcraft sale at Christ Memorial Church. Their dream grew until the store was opened last November.

The Grand Opening was held in January of 1989 when, according to volunteer Joe Cusack, "the elements of the dream came together: the students, the store and the ministry."

The store has been dedicated to two sets of husband-wife former missionaries. Nelle and Edgar Smith were agricultural missionaries in North Africa from the Christian Reformed Church, and John and Bernadine DeValois were missionaries in India from Hope Reformed Church. Mrs. DeValois is at present a volunteer at Western Bridge.

The store gets its merchandise from six alternative trade organizations: Christian Cottage Imports, sponsored by the CRC SELFHELP, a Mennonite sponsored organization; Serry, sponsored by the Church of the Brethrenen; Thai International; The Other Way, based in Grand Rapids; and an orphanage in Pakistan and other Third World countries.

In addition, Chon Youg, pastor of the Laotian Church here in Holland and a student at Western Seminary, has arranged so that families in refugee camps in Laos ship crafts to their relatives here among the 100 Laotian families in Holland for sale in the store.

Western Bridge is staffed by volunteers from around the Holland community. Hope's Western Seminary students and church members throughout Holland all donate their time to keep the store open.

At present, the store is open four days a week. They would like to stay open longer, but, there is a shortage of help. Additional volunteers are being sought so that the Western Bridge can be open six days a week by April.

Anyone interested in donating some time may call the Western Seminary office at 382-8555, and leave a message. Someone from Western Bridge will get back to you.

Genesis offers relaxation

by Peter Schultz
anchor staff writer

A new Holland business has become the first public health clinic to use a futuristic sound machine called Genesis, a machine that helps people relieve stress by listening to music.

Sound Health Center, located at the ISG building on Waverly Road north of 16th Street, is the first institution in the United States to offer the Genesis system to the general public, said Pati Den Uyl, center owner. Genesis has only been available in large institutions and million-dollar hospitals until now, Den Uyl said.

The purpose of Genesis is to massage and relax a patient's muscles with music, Den Uyl said.

Genesis has an aluminum-titanium space frame shaped like a hexagon with music speakers at the top. Den Uyl said Genesis is shaped this way because it represents the smallest, sub-atomic particle which forms a human being.

In the middle of Genesis is a table suspended four feet from the ground for a patient to lie on. Underneath the table are sensors monitoring the amount of tension present within the patient's muscles as he listens to the music.

What is unique about Genesis is that the patient controls the volume of the music depending on the state of his muscles, Den Uyl said. As the patient becomes relaxed, the music sounds more pleasant and beautiful, Den Uyl said. Having control over the music allows the patient to determine his relaxation state.

As the patient listens to the music, the sensors below him measure the electrical waves coming from his muscles, monitoring how tense he is. The sensors transfer this information to a large computer which changes the volume and quality of the music in order for the patient's body to achieve an ideal, relaxed state, Den Uyl said.

"Music is a universal language," Den Uyl said. "It can soothe, heal and relax."

Den Uyl said Genesis is not a short-cut to heal body problems quickly, rather it gradually assists in helping to heal a patient's tension.

Genesis was first invented 20 years ago by Michael Bradford, who lives in Indianapolis. Den Uyl sought out Bradford about Genesis two years ago because she was interested in music being a technique for managing stress.

In 1987, Den Uyl worked with Profit Technology, Inc. in New York to acquire the rights to use Genesis in her clinic.

"It's the healing tool of the 21st century," she said.

A session with Genesis lasts 45 minutes to an hour and costs $45. For best results, a patient should have at least three sessions for a reduced cost of $125. Den Uyl recommended a maximum of seven sessions and added that the cost can be covered by insurance.

Genesis is a machine which uses sound to relax and rejuvenate the stressed patient's body.

WHAT CHINA NEEDS IS A FEW MORE PEOPLE.

If you're a college graduate, or are about to become one, WorldTeach invites you to join our growing population of volunteer English teachers in China. No teaching experience or knowledge of Chinese is required.

You make a one year commitment. The school provides housing and a modest salary while you teach.

The fee for 1989 (including airfare, health insurance, training and support) is $2865. Student loans can be deferred while you teach.

Volunteers leave for China in August. The application deadline is March 30. After that, space will be available on a first-come, first-served basis.

For more information about this or any of our programs in Africa, call (617) 495-5527. Or write us at: WorldTeach, Phillips Brooks House, Harvard University, Cambridge, MA 02138.

Parking situation is pitiful

One of the allures of Hope College to the prospective student is its size — Hope's campus is small enough to walk across easily, but large enough to seem uncrowded. Even so, one aspect of the college campus disturbs this otherwise serene image; the parking lots are packed to capacity.

The administration regularly speaks about its plans for new student housing, when what Hope College really needs is more space for parking. Some might argue that an additional parking lot would turn Hope into an asphalt-covered campus, but in fact it would make the campus seem less crowded. As the number of students at Hope increases, so too must the number of parking spaces.

It appears that the administration is blind to this need. Public Safety has "cracked down" on parking violations, by ticketing cars and towing vehicles from the DeWitt circle. Their argument is that there is enough accessible parking. When the "Siberia" lot is taken into consideration, there seems to be plenty, according to their rationale. In fact, what they fail to realize is that there is a reason why the lot is known as "Siberia." It's a long way from anything.

While those who do not park in designated spots should be ticketed, Public Safety and the administration should both realize that there is a reason for all the illegal parking around campus. One needs only to look at the amount of parallel parking on the streets around campus to realize that Hope's parking situation is inadequate.

Obviously there is no easy solution to this problem. There is no empty tract of land readily available for a nearby parking lot, and a parking structure might well be impossible under current Holland zoning laws. A solution might be to eliminate underclassmen vehicles, as other colleges and universities have done, but this would only cause resentment from the student body.

Lastly, while it is necessary to have designated faculty and staff parking lots, such as the Dow Center or DePree lots, it is unreasonable to ticket student vehicles for parking overnight in those spaces. After all, how many of the faculty need to be on campus after midnight? With the growing number of students who drive cars, some compromise must be made by Public Safety.

It is unfair to expect that empty parking spaces will remain empty late at night, when the need for student parking is as great as it is now. The fact that Holland ordinances prohibit parking on streets between the hours of 2 a.m. and 8 a.m. only compounds this problem. A compromise would be to let students park in faculty lots between the hours of 11 p.m. and 8 a.m., so that students have parking nearer their dorms than the Siberia lot.

While there are certainly no easy remedies to the problems of parking, Hope College needs to evaluate the current parking situation and come to some sort of a resolution. It is unfair for students to pay $40 for a parking permit, only to be unable to park at a reasonable distance from campus and campus residences.

Off the Cuff

Eric Shotwell

Once, not very long ago, in a land on the shores of a great lake, there was a kingdom. The kingdom was, by most standards, a very beautiful, if conservative, kingdom. And in this kingdom there was a castle.

This castle was not your typical, run-of-the-mill castle, mind you. This particular castle had a snack bar, a radio station, a bookstore and a myriad of other rooms. It even had its own newspaper. Some rooms, the dungeons, were known by names such as "Student Development" or "the mail room," in order to hide their evil intent. But even with the hidden rooms and passageways of the DeWitt Castle, life in the kingdom of Hope College went on relatively unhindered.

At least until word started to spread of a great evil growing deep within the castle. Word had it, among the people of the kingdom of Hope, that ogres lurked within the castle's loftier rooms... in the bowels of the dreaded Business Office.

Prince Bruce (for that is what all males who inhabited DeWitt Castle were called) ascended the great staircase to the Business Office, sword in hand. His quest was, it seemed, a simple one. Before he knew it, he stood before the entrance to the Business Office. The sign on the gate read "Business Office — don't bother." Grimly, he turned the handle and entered.

Inside, all was quiet. There appeared to be no movement whatsoever in the office. Then, Prince Bruce noticed it. Behind the desk, something lurked. It didn't speak, didn't move. It just lurked, and its lurking terrified Prince Bruce. "I'm here for my paycheck," said Bruce, in the bravest voice he could muster. "I need to see some identification," snarled the lurking ogre behind the desk.

"But it's only for 17 cents," said Bruce.

"Sorry, no I.D., no paycheck. I'll just have to EAT YOU!" bellowed the ogre. It no longer lurked. Rather, it moved forward, preparing to eat Prince Bruce. Bruce brandished his sword, but knew he could not fend off the horrible, frowning, lurking ogre.

Suddenly, the clock struck the noon hour, and he was saved. The ogre beat a hasty retreat for the back door of the Business Office. Ogres were a nasty bunch, and were determined not to leave their office open for any longer than they absolutely had to, even during their mandatory lunch hour.

Prince Bruce left the Office of the Ogres, happy that he hadn't become an ogre-burger but sad that he still didn't have a paycheck. He knew he'd have to return to the Business Office once more, after the ogres had feasted, to claim his check. At least then they'd be full, he thought with a shudder.

Proverb of the kingdom: If a Business Office ogre smiles at you while handing you a paycheck, it isn't being nice — just hungry.
Dear Editor,

I want to respond to an article that was run in your last issue. Janet Singleton, of the College Press Service, highlighted a book by Charles Sykes that claims college professors “are lazy bums.” Sykes presented as evidence reams of data that show “most professors teach only 7-1-2 to 9 hours a week.” He reinforced his argument by indicating tenure as a way to protect the jobs of these negligent professors.

While Sykes’ observations may hold true at the universities he visited (University of Michigan, Berkeley and Harvard), I feel they have no footing at Hope.

While it may seem that Hope professors do not spend a great deal of time in the classroom, it strikes me that they spend significantly more time there than the professors referred to in Sykes’ article.

A typical Hope professor (I use the term professor to refer to all Hope educators) might carry three to four three-hour classes per semester. While this can seem a light and refreshing load to a student, one must keep in mind the duties of a professor: to faithfully attend each class session (no sleeping during class or a rough night); to have prepared material (no slacking off until the weekend); to be ready to participate actively in each class (no hiding in the back of the classroom); and to evaluate each one of the students, fairly and comprehensively.

In all addition to all this, professors are expected to attend numerous departmental and board meetings, to help choose new members of their department, to attend colloquia and seminars relevant to their disciplines and to participate in the “life of the college.”

However much, students still expect more than they’re given. We students demand bountiful office hours (but how many of you have ever stopped in during these hours?); we want our professors to think of interesting, fun ways to conduct class (but have you ever tried to make a homework assignment interesting?); and, above all else, we expect papers and tests to be returned within 48 hours of a professor’s receiving them. Have you, students, ever tried to grade 30 7-page papers in a couple of hours? Professors assign homework on top of their regular class preparation.

What the Hope College administration expects of our professors is even more ludicrous than what we students expect. The administration wants our professors to pursue professional development as a way to teach. Whether this be advanced research in physics or biology, or publishing poems or scholastic articles, teachers who are already under pressure from students are pressurized still more by the administration.

The administration will not financially support our professors to the level of performance the administration desires. While Hope is one of the best schools in the MIAA, our professors receive a pittance for their efforts.

As students, we must support our professors. They are here because they LIKE TO TEACH. Research can be carried out more intensively, and for more money, in the private sector; and our teachers could leave Hope for more lucrative teaching positions elsewhere (even in high schools). Recognize your teachers as professionals who like Hope, its students, and the opportunity to teach here. Until the administration realizes that all that’s keeping our professors here is dedication to the cause, we as students must support our professors.

Sincerely,
Kurt Bouman

SLIP OF THE MIND

JIM MONNETT

It’s days like this one when you are so cynical about life that the newest disaster is just going to have to stand in line before you have the energy to give a care. It slowly dawns on you that life really isn’t fair. Most people academically know that life isn’t fair, and if they don’t, one look at the government changes their minds. But they maintain an optimism that it does all come out even in the end. They go to work daily secure in the knowledge that they can make a difference.

Even I can hear song birds singing through my cynicism.

To be honest it wouldn’t surprise me if Holland’s first mugger rolled me on the way to Phelps and its walled entrance. I might even write the mugger a $72 check just to keep the money from the hungry collection agencies. At least I would know that the mugger is using the money on something pleasurable. Who knows where my money goes when the Emergency Physicians of Holland get their grubby hands on it for the second time? Maybe I’m too apathetic.

Actually, I’m not sure if apathy quite carries the proper meaning. “Ach-thypt,” as pre-Trump Bill the Cat use to say, better describes the feeling. It’s the kind of feeling you have about three days after being hit between the shoulder blades by a raquetball moving at Mach 3.

You walk around knowing that behind the next corner Jack Fate is waiting to sucker punch you for more rational than to see how you take it. The knowledge of his presence doesn’t scare you as much as it breeds reluctant acceptance. You get to the point where it’s all to be expected. Given any other day the bill fiasco might have caused me to blow a few neurons out my ears in frustration. But as I said it’s a boring day. Boring in the sense that even the unexpected is par for the course.

JIM MONNETT

Dear Editor,

I’d like to take this opportunity to say thank you to all the people at SAC who are responsible for the movies shown in the auditorium. All too often students are never praised for their good deeds, only reprimanded for the bad. It’s time to turn this around.

I am custodian at Graves Hall. When I first came here I was warned of how the auditorium might look after a weekend of movies. I was not looking forward to my first Monday after. To my surprise it was not as I had expected, and to this day I am grateful for the school year. I can honestly say I have never encountered anything as awful as I was warned. I appreciate the time you take to clean things up.

Thank you for your courtesy,
Ann Grant

Take a chance on new movie 'Chances Are'

by Jim Monnett
anchor entertainment editor

It's been a long time since a romantic comedy has delivered both loving romance and funny comedy, but "Chances Are" succeeds where the majority fails.

This new movie begins with the marriage of Corrine, played wonderfully by Cybill Shepard, to Louie, with Robert Downey, Jr. in rare form as Philip, the best man who admits he loves Corrine. He is seen as a good friend.

This complex, implausible plot might have overwhelmed a lesser cast, but each of the four characters shine in their own way to bring the audience into the story and care for the characters.

Downey is the glue that holds the movie together. His casual portrayal of Alek is refreshing and not forced at all. Each thing in the house that he touches triggers a different memory that he didn't know he had. It's a pleasure to watch.

The movie's humor is most evident when Miranda kisses Alek and Alek as a 22-year-old enjoys it, but then in his eyes you see him suddenly realize that she is his daughter. From that point on Alek treats her like his daughter.

Masterson plays Miranda as a good supporting actress should to all of this is Philip who loves Corrine, but is only seen as a friend.

The story and to care for the characters that is missing from most romantic comedies, not to mention modern movies in general.

Overall the movie was a light comedy with the right amount of humor and romance and a great cast willing to let one another share the screen to elevate "Chances Are" above the majority of drivel on the screen during the slow movie months of winter.

Fulton to give reading

On Monday, March 27 at 8 p.m. in the Holland Area Arts Center, 25 W. 8th Street, poet Alice Fulton will give a reading.

Alice Fulton received her M.F.A. from Cornell University in 1982. Her first book of poems, Dance Manuscript with Electric Ballerina, won the 1982 Associated Writing Programs Award and was published by the University of Pennsylvania Press in 1983.

Her second book, Palladium, a winner of the 1985 National Poetry Series and the 1987 Society of Midland Authors Award, was published by the University of Illinois Press in 1986. It is now in its third printing.

Alice Fulton has read her poems at universities and arts centers across the nation. Recent readings include appearances at The Manhattan Theatre Club, Boston University, Wesleyan University, The University of Arizona, University of Utah, UCLA, Pomona College and Reed College.

She has received fellowships from The Provincetown Fine Arts Work Center, The Michigan Society of Fellows, The Michigan Council for the Arts, and the Guggenheim Foundation. Her other honors include The Poetry Society of America's Conuelo Ford Award, The Emily Dickinson Award, and The Rainer Maria Rilke Award.

In 1988 she joined a delegation of eight American writers invited to The People's Republic of China for the purpose of meeting Chinese writers. She is the William Willhartz Assistant Professor of English at The University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

The reading, sponsored by the Holland Area Arts Council and OPUS, the Hope College Literary magazine, is free and open to the public.
Guest artist Sachiyo Ito performed Fuji Ondo, a 150-year-old Japanese classical dance of the Kabuki style. In this dance, the spirit of the wisteria tree, represented by a young girl, has some wine and dances in a romantic mood.

Phil Mendel Quintet jazzes up Arthurs'

by Mpine Qakisa
anchor staff writer

Six students from Hope College have formed a jazz quintet that plays at Arthur's bar every Saturday from 9 p.m. to midnight.

The Phil Mendel Quintet, which started early this year, includes Jon Liang on trumpet, Dave Noller on saxophone, Scott Mendels on piano, Mark Laddley on drums, Jason Langham on bass, and Leni Weisl as singer for the group.

Weisl said that they played with the idea of forming a jazz band last April, but the band was not officially formed until September.

"We initiated this group because we needed to learn how to play jazz, and you can't learn to play jazz by yourself," said Liang, a sophomore German major.

"I love to sing in a setting that is educational and professional and Arthur's provides both," said Weisl, a senior theatre and psychology major.

"We wanted to learn more about jazz, and you can't learn jazz, and you can't learn how to play jazz by yourself," said Langham, a freshman Spanish major.

"You always feel professional when you sing in front of an audience," she added, "though we are not paid much because of the audience," she added, "though we are not paid much because of the audience." According to Weisl, the group plays about 40 or 50 charts a night which helps them to get a "feel of jazz."

"We just want to become tighter or sound better as a group before we start performing outside," said Mendels.

The band is coached by John Shea, guest artist in residence and well-known jazz pianist in West Michigan, who helps the group to know more about jazz, according to Weisl.

Mendels said that the group wants to learn as much as they can from playing at places like Arthur's, and sometime they will play at the Kletz.

"We told him that he needs us to play at the Kletz. We just want to become more professional." said Mendels.

Russell voted top Division III swimmer

HOPE — Hope College senior Shelly Russell of Battle Creek (Lakeview High School) has been voted the NCAA Division III Swimmer of the Year for the second year in a row.

Russell was presented the honor by the College Swimming Coaches Association Saturday on the final night of the NCAA Division III swimming and diving championships at the University of Notre Dame.

An NCAA All-American 22 times during her collegiate career and the most valuable swimmer in the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association (MIAA) three years in a row, Russell led the Flying Dutch to a 10th consecutive MIAA title with the most valuable collegiate Athletic Association career and the most valuable Hope and because of clinical study demands was faced with a schedule that limited her training routine.

The Flying Dutch earned All-America honors in the 400-yard and 800-yard freestyle relays. Members of both relay teams were Russell, sophomore Jill Anne Bannink of Holland and sophomore Kristy Achterhof of Fairfax, Va. Swimming on the 400 team was junior Elizabeth Becker of Holland while rounding out the 800 team was junior Kirsten Van Overen of Kentwood.

Sophomore Lori Gano of Albion earned honorable mention All-America honors in three events finishing eleventh in the 200-yard backstroke and thirteenth in the 200-yard freestyle, both in school record times, and fifteenth in the 100-yard backstroke.

Senior diver Diane Vos of Zeeland also earned honorable mention All-America recognition twice as she finished sixteenth on both the one-meter and three-meter boards.

The honor this year is especially deserving because Shelly made major personal sacrifices in order to achieve in both swimming and in the classroom.

Russell is a nursing major at Hope and because of clinical study demands was faced with a schedule that limited her training routine.

Hope has finished among the nation's top ten teams in Division III for four years. This year the Flying Dutch totaled 136 points at the national meet.

It's March Madness time again. Time for all normal life to stop until the high school and college basketball champions are named.

The college tournament field has been named, so there is no longer any question as to who will be going. In this column, I'll pick the teams I think have the best chance of making the final four, and who I believe will win the tournament.

One thing you may want to keep in mind is that I blew my predictions on the World Series and the Super Bowl, and still have to pay up on the bets I lost to my girlfriend. So you may not want to put too much faith in these predictions.

Incidentally guys, one thing that I learned from reading the Detroit Free Press' George Puscas is that if you bet on sporting events, always bet your girlfriend a kiss. That way you can't lose, and even if you do, at least she'll know that you'll pay up.

But now back to basketball. I'm just going to list the 10 teams that I think have the best chance and give a few reasons to back my choices up.

1. Siena -- ECAC-N Atlantic conference champ. The one thing Siena has going for them is a measles epidemic on their campus. Because of this, they have been quarantined and have played their games in front of empty arenas. The reason that I pick them for the final four is that the last time a team was quarantined by the NCAA, they made the final four. But if that doesn't work, they can infect all the other teams and get to the finals by forfeit.

2. Illinois -- The Illini to waltz into the final four. As far as high schools go, my pick for national champion. They play the toughest schedule in the country and are consistently in the tournament but look for that to change this year. Michigan is as talented as any team in the country, and they're motivated; they want another shot at Indiana.

3. Georgetown -- The Hoyas have great coaching, great defense, and Alonzo Mourning, who almost made the Olympic team as a high schooler. Georgetown hones their skills all year in the tough Big East conference and are consistently in the tournament.

4. Arizona -- The Wildcats have momentum all year and are capable of beating anyone in the country. Their win against Arizona in the Pacific Ten Conference tournament will help greatly at the tournament.

5. Illini -- The Illini were the best team in the country before point guard Kendall Gill got hurt, but he's back now. Look for the Illini to win the national title.

6. Syracuse -- Derrick Coleman is from Detroit.

7. Oklahoma -- The Sooners would probably be higher, except for one problem: I don't like them. The Sooners are a great team, but I think their cockiness and their coach's attitude are going to catch up with them. They've got a lot of teams gunning for them in the tournament and will have their work cut out for them.

8. Missouri -- The Tigers have played well all year and are capable of beating anyone in the country. Their win against number one Oklahoma is proof of this.

9. Indiana -- I'm tempted to write the Hoosiers off, but that mistake has been made already this year, and the Hoosiers won the Big Ten Title. Other than Big Ten player of the year Jay Edwards, the Hoosiers don't seem to have an overwhelming line-up, but they're disciplined and Bobby Knight is their coach which counts for something at tournament time.

10. Kansas -- The Jayhawks will be going on. In this column, I'll pick the teams I think have the best chance of making the final four, and who I believe will win the tournament.
Tennis to blend experience with new styles of recruits

A squad that has an excellent blend of veterans and newcomers gives cause for optimism this spring for the Hope College women's tennis team.

Coach Kathy Van Tubergen's Flying Dutch opened their season yesterday with a non-league, indoor match at Ferris State University.

The team's annual spring trip between March 18-25 will consist of matches against colleges in Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina. The home season starts April 1 with an MIAA match against Albion.

In 1988 the Flying Dutch qualified as a team for the NCAA Division III national tournament, winning two of three matches of a fifth place finish. Hope shared Kalamazoo College as the MIAA championship with Grand Rapids and Becky Danson of Kalamazoo.

Coach Van Tubergen's pre-season roster includes six freshman prospects - Monica Earl of Kalamazoo, Kathy Franscomb of Holland, Jessie Frederick of Cadillac, Amy Haveman of Zeeland, Michelle Kalusniak of Hilldale, and Katherine Singer of Goshen, Ind.

The Flying Dutch will enter the 1989 season with a dual meet winning streak of 14 triumphs in a row. A season highlight will be hosting the great Lakes Colleges Association (GLCA) tournament on April 7-8. The MIAA tournament will be held April 27-28 at Kalamazoo while the NCAA Division III national tournament will be played May 5-13 at the Claremont colleges in Claremont, California.
