Kletz slated for facelift

by Sunni Tenhor
staff writer

Plans are being discussed about remodeling the Kletz to add a lounge-type atmosphere with study and recreation areas.

Student Congress, along with Dean of Student Development Richard Frost, Vice President of Business and Finance William Anderson and the Student Activities Committee, has met numerous times since last fall to come up with a feasible idea for creating a new Kletz with the students in mind.

According to Andrew Stewart, Comptroller of Student Congress, the current Kletz is not being utilized enough by the students. It is being primarily used as a cafeteria for faculty and staff, the goal is to have a new central gathering place for the students.

The idea was presented to Judy Reckley, part-time art professor at Hope, to see what kind of plans she and her interior design class could come up with for a remodeling of the Kletz.

Reckley can be credited for designing various places in downtown Holland such as “Nickelodian,” “Till Midnight” and other storefronts. Her plans are expected to be reported within the next few weeks.

According to Stewart, renovation could start this summer if all goes well. “By next fall,” Stewart says, “the students will not recognize the old Kletz.”

Anderson says the remodeling will involve new lighting, floor coverings and furniture. “It will primarily be more cosmetic than ‘restructuring,’” Anderson says.

Funding for the project has not been determined yet because plans are still in the conceptual stage. Stewart says that Student Congress has tentatively pledged a small sum of the money needed.

According to Jonathon Hoffman, President of Student Congress, funding could develop from donations made from alumni and supporters of Hope College. Bill Anderson said, “The funds will come primarily out of college resources.”

Dutch advance to Final Four

by Rochelle Anderson

With senior leadership and inspired play, theFlying Dutch defeated the Buena Vista Beavers in overtime last Saturday at the Dow Center in a quarterfinal action of the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division III tournament.

Guided by first-year coach Sue Wise, the fourth ranked Dutch advance to the semifinals by defeating the unranked Beavers, 85-79.

Buena Vista’s six to seven point lead throughout the game was hard to overcome. As soon as Hope went on a run, Buena Vista countered so that Hope never gained an advantage for long.

With 55 seconds left in regulation play and the score tied at 70, Buena Vista called a time-out after gaining possession on a held ball.

Hope’s defense held tough, knocking the ball out of bounds twice in the next few seconds of play. However, Buena Vista scored and Hope brought the ball to mid-court before calling a time-out with only 11 seconds left on the clock, trailing by two.

Hope inbounded the ball and worked the ball around the perimeter. With three seconds left senior co-captain Holly VandenBerg received a pass inside and took the shot, but missed. Hope crashed the boards and Lisa Nienhuis grabbed the rebound and hit the shot as the buzzer rang. Hope had tied the game at 72 and headed into overtime.

Coach Wise commented after the game, “The kids make it happen when they need to make it happen. Someone will always pick us up.”

Nienhuis said after the game that during the time-out Coach Wise told the team, “Believe in yourself and know that you can do it.”

In overtime, the Dutch took control from the outset and outscores the Beavers 13-9. Senior co-captain Diana Disney made a three pointer and Anne Marie Postmus added two buckets for seven straight points for Hope. Disney took another triple, missed and got her own rebound across court and passed to VandenBerg who put it in the hole.

With 1:45 left to play, Buena Vista called a time-out trailing 81-75. Buena Vista didn’t give up and came out and scored the next four points. These were the last points they scored, though, and Disney put the icing on the cake with another three pointer. The last seconds were spent at the line, with Nienhuis making one of two and Buena Vista missing the front end of a one-and-one.

When asked what she thought of the tournament, Nienhuis caught her breath and said, “The whole thing is incredible. God has been with us from day one.”

The Beavers were plagued with poor free-throw shooting for the entire game. They shot four of ten in the first half and three for nine in the second to shoot 37 percent for the game. The Dutch shot a perfect four for four in the overtime win against Buena Vista.

Pro-Choice lobbyists travel to Lansing

by Tim Grotenthuis

staff writer

Members of Hope Students for Choice traveled to Lansing, March 8 to speak with the governor and four to five senators about the abortions issue.

A member of the organization, Junior Lara DeluMater said that they were going to thank the governor for his recent veto on the parental consent legislation that had been up for consideration. They also wanted to meet those senators that are pro-choice and to thank them for their work.

When asked if they tried to persuade any anti-choice senators to a pro-choice view, DeluMater replied, "It's hard to persuade people because it's a moral decision based on their own policies and what they believe to be true."

The group, however, did relate their point of view to the one anti-choice senator they spoke to, telling him the merits of pro-choice and why pro-choice legislation is a good thing. The senator, Senator Sikkenga, was rumored to be middle-ground on the issue, but turned out to be "very strong in his conviction against abortion."

He agreed, however, that reproductive rights are important. Although they did not get to thank the governor personally, they feel that they accomplished what they had set out to do.

DeluMater said, "It's good to be visible and to let people know that you're happy they made the decisions they did or if not tell people what you think."

Hope Students for Choice has had three meetings so far with about 25 names signed up. Their next meeting will be March 26 at 6 p.m. in the Maas Conference Room.

Hope-Calvin create joint food service

by Carrie Maples

news editor

In an effort to provide better service to their students, Hope and Calvin colleges are creating a joint food service.

The idea was proposed by William Anderson, vice president for business and finance and by Calvin's vice-president for administration and finance, William Boer. The Board of Trustees approved the proposal in January.

Anderson said, "What's going to be is there will be a management company formed," and explained that Hope and Calvin will be the major stock holders. "If there are any profits they come back to the colleges."

One of the advantages, said Anderson, is that "it allows for more local control over the food service. Students for instance would have a greater voice."

As of June 1, 1990 the management company will be in place. The overall cost to students will reflect the changes they want.

Measles outbreak occurs in Michigan

(ROPE) - Recent cases of measles (Rubeola) in Michigan have made certain of one's immunization status of critical importance to college age students, according to the Health Clinic.

The clinic reports that there are currently no cases of measles on the Hope campus. Because of the pre-immunization policy at Hope College for the past four years, the campus is far less susceptible to a measles outbreak than other campuses, and the 1989-90 incoming students should have met the requirements upon admission.

However, measles is a serious, highly contagious disease with potentially severe complications. The clinic encourages each student to check their records and contact their family physician during spring break if immunization is needed.

The Public Health Department and the American Academy of Pediatrics have made three recommendations concerning measles: college students born before 1987 are immune, college students born after 1987 who have never been immunized should receive the vaccine and college students who received their injection before 15 months of age should be re-immunized.

Campuses becoming more radical

(CPS) - Students and campuses will be more radical and activist during the 1990s, Wilmington College history Professor Vinton Prince predicts.

"Each generation of students this century has tended to play off, or reject, the values of the previous one," said Prince, who has tried the cycles of college activism.

"Activism has been on the downside long enough that the rhythm of history suggests things will start up again," Prince said.

"The cycle is beginning to move. Over the last several years there has been a creeping back to the left."

Prince's observations mirror the annual survey of college freshepersons conducted jointly by the American Council on Education (ACE) and the University of California at Los Angeles, which found a rise in student activism among freshepersons enrolled in 1989.

A record number of freshepersons - 36.7 percent - reported in the survey that they had participated in an organized political demonstration during their senior year in high school.

Prince predicts that the radical movements will begin at the University of California at Berkeley and at campuses in Boston, Mass.

"Most trends originate on one coast and leapfrog to similar kinds of schools. Then they pattern down to the heartlands."

Orchestra concert held tonight

The Hope College Orchestra, Dr. Robert Ritaema, conductor, will present a concert as a part of the 1990 March Festival tonight at 8 p.m. in Dimnent Memorial Chapel. Featured soloist on the concert will be Roy Schaberg, formerly horn professor at Hope College, performing one of the most famous of all horn concertos, the "Concerto in E Flat Major" by Richard Strauss.

Centennial Park Apts. experience bomb scare

Friday afternoon, the Centennial Park Apartments were subject to a bomb scare. A small explosive charge that was originally part of an art sculpture was found in the parking lot by a National Guardsman. The Holland City Police were called in and they called in the Michigan State Police bomb squad. The explosive device was taken to the state laboratory for testing.

Japanese language program offered

From July 23 to August 15, 1990, Susquehanna University, at Jenison grove, PA, will offer an intensive program in Japanese language and culture. Sixty hours of elementary and intermediate language instruction will be provided for four transferrable credit hours.

An American instructor and a native instructor will co-teach the daily classes using progressive dynamic methods and materials. For further information contact Jane Yeager, Program Director, Department of Continuing Education, Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, PA 17870-1001, (717)372-4354. Applications are due by June 22.

Professor gives excuse for lack of robes

"I regard academic regalia as the trappings of Monarchism and Medievalism. This being the late 20th century, and I being a small 'r' republican, object to these undemocratic displays of pomp. And I also forgot to bring my robes that day."

The Dow Jones Newspaper Fund, through their 1990 Minority Reporting Intern Scholarship Competition for College Sophomores, will offer 20 $1,000 scholarships to college sophomores who will work this summer as reporting interns for newspapers.

Private schools feel tuition hike crunch

Private schools are feeling the crunch of tuition hikes. At Oberlin College (OH), students have organized to oppose tuition hikes they say will drive the cost of tuition, room and board above $20,000 in 1990-91 - an increase of 9.7 percent over this year's bill. The cost of attending other private schools such as Harvard University (MA) and Stanford University (CA) and Bennington College (VT) is also more than $19,000 and likely to top $20,000 next year.

Visual arts program director comes to campus

Alvin Sher, Program Director and Visual Arts Adviser, will be at Hope on Thursday, March 29. He plans to meet with students interested in the New York Arts Program from 9:30 a.m. to 12 noon, followed by lunch with faculty. After resuming student interviews from 1:30 to 4:00, he will give a slide talk in Degree Art Center from 4 to 5:30. For complete details call stuart Sharp at the Music Department.
U.S. students flood Eastern Europe programs

by Amy Hudson

(CPS) - When President Bush and Soviet leader Mikhail Gor-bachev met in November at the Malta Summit they pledged, among other things, to more than double the number of existing student exchanges between their countries.

The result, observers now say, has been a virtual student rush for foreign programs in the Soviet Union and other European countries.

"We're having a difficult time meeting the needs of students," said Vance Savage, dean of international education at Oregon's Lewis & Clark College.

"It's a whole new ball game now," declared Kirk Robey, head of foreign student programs at Ball State University in Indiana.

Robey, who helps coordinate exchanges with schools all over the world, noted, "A lot of individual institutions are starting exchanges in the Eastern Bloc. Eventually, he says, students themselves will be setting them up.

In the past month half a dozen colleges have asked Lewis & Clark, which also has a reputation as a leader in foreign study programs, for advice about setting up international exchanges, Savage said.

Lots of schools, he added, are expanding their student abroad programs or starting from scratch on new ones.

Based on figures from the 1987-88 school year, the most re-cent available, about 62,341 students from 1,700 colleges and universities studied in another country, reported the Institute of International Education.

During the 1988-89 school year, about 366,354 students enrolled on American campuses were from another country.

Both of those figures likely will increase as the programs in the Eastern Bloc - where many of the ruling communist parties have dismantled themselves, opened their commercial markets, created legislatures and freed speech - take hold and as Soviet relations continue to warm, Savage predicted.

At his own school, student demand for foreign study has in creased so much that Savage is trying to establish a second ex-change program in the Soviet Union.

In the first one, started in the fall of 1988, 10 Lewis & Clark students swap places with 10 undergraduates from Khabarovsk Pedagogical Institute, located in a remote section in the Far East region of the Soviet Union.

Setting up an exchange the second time around, Savage adds, is a lot easier.

"It took me five years to get that first affiliation in the Soviet Union," Savage remembered. Then, exchanges had to be set up through the Soviet government.

'To study here would be a dream.'

Now, he says American schools can go directly to Soviet colleges to set up trades.

"I could negotiate half a dozen exchanges now," Soviets, Savage says, "are dying to get people here now."

"The people at my university," agreed Soviet exchange student Alexander Muratov, "their desire is to get to the United States. To study here would be a dream." Muratov, who's from the Republic of Russia and is spending an academic year at Middlebury College in Vermont, said he's one of three students at his university of 12,000 students in the United States.

The number is quickly increasing. In late February, Harvard University announced with great fanfare that it had accepted its first three masters of business administration students from the Soviet Union.

Getting U.S. students over there, moreover, should be a top priority for American colleges, most exchange program officials agree.

"Institutions have an obligation to provide international opportunities for students," Savage asserted. Global education, he added, "is going to be one of the major trends in education of the nineties."

"You can no longer be an educated man and just know Western culture," declared Wilber Chaffee, a government professor at St. Mary's College of California near San Francisco.

Chaffee's been pushing to internationalize the school's curriculum -- including set up foreign exchanges -- for 12 years. Only recently, he said, have administrators given him a warm reception, mostly because of imminent changes in the population of California. Demographers predicted that by the year 2000, there will be no majority ethnic group.

"We have got to meet the educational needs of California," Chaffee said.

Changes in Europe and elsewhere, Chaffee added, "have made us feel a little keenener what we have to do get done."

By many accounts, most colleges have a long way to go. Not enough students study abroad and those who do tend to end up in big cities in Western Europe, Lewis & Clark's Savage maintained.

And most American college officials, say foreign students, know very little of different cultures.

"I have a feeling they're very curious, but it's almost obvious they don't know very much," says Florian Techei, a Ball State exchange student from West Berlin.

History majors present papers

by Pam Schmidt

Three Hope College history majors will be presenting papers at the annual Phi Alpha Theta regional meeting to be held at Hillsdale College on March 17.

Julie Grutter, Jill Hough, and Andrea Peake are members of Phi Alpha Theta, the national honor society, and will be presenting papers on their undergraduate research efforts.

Grutter's paper, "Winter from the 'Season of Silence' to an Independent Women's Rights Movement, 1830-1869," was written for a seminar taught by Dr. William Cohen. It traces the emergence of organizations created solely to advance women's rights after the success of the abolitionist cause meant that women's issues would no longer be dominated by it.

Grutter, a senior, is a double major in history and economics.

Hough, a senior history major, will present a paper done for Curry's U.S. Foreign Policy course, "President Truman and the State of Isreal," in which she explores Truman's role in establishing the U.S. as a central player in the conflict that has troubled the Middle East for over forty years. Some of Hough's research was done in the Middle East during fall semester of 1988 when she participated in the Great Lakes Jerusalem Program.

Peake's paper was written for a

Free credit hours offered for Japan

(HOPE) - A recent change to the Japan May-June Term will now allow students to be awarded 6 credit hours free of charge! This change represents nearly $900 in savings to each student.

The fee for the program is $3,000. This includes tuition for six hours of college credit, lodging and major travel in Japan for five weeks (including trips to Kyoto, Nara, and Hiroshima), two meals per day, and transportation fees for nearly all activities. The program fee is heavily subsidized from Japan, and without this generous subsidy the program would be nearly doubled.

Hope has negotiated a low group airfare to Japan. Compared with the cheapest individual rate currently offered, the group fare represents a savings of nearly $300 per student. The total cost of the program (including program fee and round-trip air fare) is $3,290.

In the past, students participating in the Japan May-June Term have often extended their stay to other Asian countries. From Japan, it is very economical to visit any of the following countries: China, Hong Kong, Korea, Taiwan, and Hawaii.

All students will receive three hours of IDS 280 (Contemporary Issues in Japan). The allocation of the three additional credit hours is rather flexible, and can be applied in most cases to core requirements.

If you are interested in learning more about the 1990 Japan May-June Term, you are urged to contact Prof. Muiderman immediately.

Deposit for the group airfare must be in by March 31.
National Lampoon targets campuses with new, improved humor

NATIONAL LAMPoon, once the paradigm of outrageous, hip and happily mean collegiate humor, is trying to make a comeback. Here's how:

The marketing strategy has already begun to work, boasts Carr. The magazine's circulation has increased by 7 percent - from 221,000 to 241,000 - in the last six months.

"This was just a spontaneous thing done by a group of students," said spokesman Karl Maugeri. Penn has no rule against streaking.

Boilermaker's 'Nude Olympics' banned while others streak

(CPS) - While Purdue University authorized the arrest of students who participated in its now-banned "Nude Olympics" in January, students at the University of Pennsylvania are trying to establish an annual streak through the Philadelphia campus' Quadrangle.

About 20 males, wearing nothing but their socks and tennis shoes, shouted "get naked" as they ran through Penn- sylvania's campus Feb. 12. But in our fraternity we don't condone it," Matheson said.

The magazine's circulation has increased by 7 percent - from 221,000 to 241,000 - in the last six months.

"This was just a spontaneous thing done by a group of students," said spokesman Karl Maugeri. Penn has no rule against streaking.

Boilermaker does. Hoping to end a circus-like atmosphere and the potential health hazards involved in naked students dashing through the Janu- ary nights of Indiana, Purdue banned the annual "Nude Olympics" in 1985.

Since then, however, a hearty band of students has maintained the tradition each year since the ban. Eight students were ar- rested for their participation in the nude race through the Pur- due campus Jan. 26.

Other schools are more relaxed about the issue. In 1986 the University of Texas at Austin of- ficially recognized the student group NUDE, which sought to promote a clothing-optional lifestyle.

The group, which sponsored trips to nude beaches, naked volleyball tournaments and hot tub parties, disbanded last spring because of lack of membership.
History prof fired for calling Holocaust a myth

(CPS) — A history instructor has been fired for teaching his class that the Holocaust never occurred.

Donald Dean Hiner, a part-time instructor at Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis (IUPUI), was dismissed for lecturing that the Holocaust is a Jewish myth, and asserting that “none of it makes sense unless you look at it from the prospect of Israel getting a lot of wealth from this story.”

The Simon Wiesenthal Center, a Los Angeles-based group dedicated to teaching about the Holocaust, hailed the university’s decision.

“We are deeply gratified at the university’s swift and proper action,” said Rabbi Abraham Cooper, associate dean of the center. “This decision reinforces the commitment of academic integrity and the pursuit of truth, while striking a blow against bigotry that masquerades as scholarship.

Rene Aruckbile, an IUPUI sophomore, taped Hiner’s Feb. 9 lecture and turned it over to school administrators.

Hiner denies he is anti-Semitic, saying he just attempted to teach another school of thought. “I do not consider myself a revisionist,” he told The Indianapolis News.

A few fringe political groups trying to concoct a historical rationale for anti-Semitism have simply denied the Holocaust ever happened. Six million Jews, dissidents, Catholics, gypsies and other innocents died in German concentration camps during World War II.

Short of evidence for their alleged lies, they began calling themselves “revisionists,” borrowing the name from a scholarly, widely respected, research-oriented group of historians that during the 1960s and 1970s exposed a dark underside of American history.

Anti-Semitic groups also have tried dressing the charge in a cloak of academic respectability by making occasional forays on to campuses.

In 1988, a leaflet published by the German-American National Political Action Committee (GAN-PAC), a Washington, D.C.-based group that says the Holocaust never happened, was left under the door of Stanford University’s Hillel Foundation.

Hans Schmidt, GAN-PAC’s chairman, told the student newspaper, the Stanford Daily, that “Holocaust studies is based on lies.”

Students protest tuition hikes

(CPS) — Trying to keep the lid on annual tuition hikes, students at Pacific Lutheran University in Washington and Syracuse University in New York spent the last week in January protesting proposed increases.

At Pacific Lutheran, where administrators proposed raising prices next school year by 11.6 percent to $10,649, about 900 students signed a petition blasting the proposed hike, the largest one in four years.

The proposed increase, said student government president Brian Slater, “is for more money than what they need to run the university effectively.”

Students at Syracuse finished a week-long boycott Feb. 2 of the school’s main dining facility and bookstores to protest a 9.94 percent increase, which will bring tuition and fees to $11,728 per academic year.

“We are trying to impose economics upon the university,” said the boycott organizer Carl Shidlow.

Syracuse spokesman Darryl Geddes dismissed the protest, saying the boycott “does not seem helpful to the cause of the students who seek a quality education at reasonably controlled tuition levels.”

The demonstrations could be the beginning of another round of protests similar to last year, when students at the University of New Mexico, Rutgers University, and the University of New York system angrily reacted to announcements of tuition hikes.

Most institutions spend January, February and March making initial proposals for what to change for students for the next academic year.

For example, the Utah Board of Regents recommended a 3 percent increase for two-year schools and a 7 percent hike for four-year institutions in 1990-91. The Florida Board of Regents proposed raising tuition at state campuses by 15 percent.

Nationwide, college tuition rose an average of 5-to-9 percent from the 1989-90 school years, the College Board reported.

Weight gain main college concern

(CPS) — In an era of warnings of how drugs can wreck their health, University of Kansas students apparently are more worried about the threat of becoming fat junk-food junkies.

In a two-year survey of nearly 300 students enrolled in his introductory health course, KU associate prof. Michael Adeyanju found most of his students said their greatest health concern was that they’d become overweight.

Seventy percent of the students believed their health behavior was “very poor,” compared to fewer than 3 percent who judged it “good.” Some of the students called their health behavior “very good” or “excellent.”

Adeyanju said the stresses of being a student are factors in students’ health behavior, and speculated his results would be nearly the same at any college or university in the country.

Students themselves cited poor time management, too much school work, and skyrocketing tuition and fees as some of the causes of their poor health.

Students who pull all-nighters, skip meals and drink lots of coffee so that they can stay up later, combined with the stress of college life, are prime candidates for heart disease later in life, Adeyanju said.

“Most students don’t sleep as much or eat as well. This combined with the stresses of student life, doesn’t do much for good health,” Adeyanju said.

Veterinary Deans threatened

(CPS) — Someone may be out to kill college veterinary school deans as a protest against laboratory research on animals.

Law enforcement agencies issued a “security alert” to vet school deans around the country this week after finding that they may be targets of extremist animal rights groups.

The alert triggered fear among those in the field, and angered animal rights groups.

The warning came weeks after the Feb. 8 ambush-murder of Hyram Kitchen, dean of the University of Tennessee College of Veterinary Medicine.

Although police have no motive for the murder, they say they have received second- and third-hand information that a radical underground animal rights group killed Kitchen and plans to kill “one dean a month for the next 12 months.”

“Ludicrous lab experiments on animals.

The alert, placed on the National Crime Information Center computer by Knoxville, Tenn., police, says it’s possible that splinter groups from People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) and the underground Animal Liberation Front (ALF) are involved.

The accusation angered the groups.

“Their fear of us is ridiculous,” said Carol Burnett, spokesperson for both groups, based in Washington D.C. “There is no basis for this reaction. Whoever started this pulled it out of thin air in an attempt to ruin our credibility.”

People are trying to capitalize on Kitchen’s murder, and that is horrible. We abhor violence. Our movement is all about saving animals, and human beings are animals,” Burnett added.

Regardless of who is responsible, veterinary school deans are taking the alert seriously. Security at Texas A&M, Ohio State, Washington State and North Carolina State universities, to name some, has tightened.

Most will not elaborate on the security measures, but Terry Curtin, dean of North Carolina State’s veterinary college acknowledged he is taking a different route to work each day.

At the University of Pennsylvania, where in January Prof. Adrian Morrison’s offices were ransacked by the local ALF group, security has increased some, but not greatly.

“We have done what would be reasonable measures in light of the rumors,” said Edwin Andrews, Dean of the Veterinary School, declining to comment further.

Although Morrison already has been targeted by animal rights activists, Andrews doesn’t believe that puts him in any greater danger than a dean at any other school. However, he added to a certain element of fear.

“Anybody in this situation would be concerned,” he said.

Morrison supports researchers Edward Taub and John Orem, who animal rights groups oppose. Taub was once convicted of cruelty to animals, but his conviction was overturned on a technicality.

Flying Dutch deserve applause and respect

Hope has always praised its men’s basketball team who has been nationally ranked five of the last eight years, but there is something just as exciting to watch who did not lose to Calvin this year and they are the Flying Dutch.

These women put forth at least as much effort as the men and go virtually unrecognized. Their home games are played at the Dow Center rather than the Holland Civic Center. Ranked as high as third and currently fourth in the nation, the team has an impressive record of 22-2, but there is more than statistics where these women are concerned.

The quick defense of Lisa Nienhuis, as well as her ball handling ability, pumps the team up and Holly VandenBerg’s ability to control the boards make for a great combination. Add the strong consistent leadership of Dina Disney and the team becomes very balanced.

The women always show a positive attitude and seem to really enjoy playing together. Evidence of the closeness of the team could be seen last Saturday when they won the quarterfinal game against Buena Vista. The enjoyment of the sport showed in their smiling faces.

The role model for this attitude is coach Sue Wise, who throughout her first year of coaching at Hope has shown a positive attitude. Many coaches yell at the officials and the team members and the fans think that they would never want to play for a coach like that, but coach Wise is always talking to her team to praise them and not cut them down.

The women are on an incredible high now after advancing to the Final Four and they deserve to have the recognition they are now receiving, from all newspapers in the area. Each and every one of them is a winner on and off the court.

Letters to the Editor

Performing arts necessary to life

Dear Editor
Thursday afternoon I was walking across campus when I happened to overhear a student talking to what sounded like prospective students. She was in the midst of describing the academic requirements of Hope when I heard her say, “Basically music, theatre and art classes are blow off courses that help keep your G.P.A. up.”

Not only was I appalled, but being a theatre major myself I was deeply offended. If I didn’t know better than to butt into other people’s conversations I would have approached this girl for further questioning. Unfortunately, my manners overrode my impulses and I kept on walking.

If I had that moment back, however, I might have turned around and asked her if she should then just consider my life to be a “blow off” and what does she consider a worthy occupation?

As a striving artist I often ask myself, “Why do theatre?” But when I take a look around me my questions are soon silenced. I believe art, music, and theatre offer a unique opportunity for society to take a step back and look at itself. A painting, a song, or a scene has the capabilities of producing such strong emotions that we are forced to step back and look at ourselves and how we identify with those emotions.

Those “blow off” introductory courses are meant to help students understand and appreciate what they are experiencing. Upper level courses help artists display their craft in the most truthful and effective way to stir emotions within an audience.

Today we are so bogged down with the problems of the world. If we weren’t ever given the opportunity to take a step back and rediscover ourselves, we would only be left with a tight little web woven around ourselves and our problems. And who would be there to untangle us?

I would like to know why that young woman chose Hope College and what a liberal arts education means to her. I wonder about any student who can leave this college without true appreciation for all fields of study. And lastly, I would have like to have asked that group of perspective students what kind of an impression that young woman gave them about our liberal arts program after a remark like that.

Model UN participants thanked

Dear Editor,

Dear Friends,

We had another great Model UN year. Around 850 persons visited our campus to participate in this year’s program. Meetings were kept small, and we had as many as eleven meetings going on at once.

That made for excellent experiences for our guests, but it also made for a lot of work on the part of many of you. Given the size of this program, we have no way of identifying all those who helped. Under the circumstances, we would like to send a note to all of you to thank you for your fine help. It was most appreciated.

We have talked to a number of high school participants and their advisors. They were most pleased with their experiences at Hope College and learned a lot about current issues in our rapidly changing world.

Again, thank you for your part.

Sincerely,

Christian College hurt by rumors of pledging violations

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the letter to the editor that was published in last week's Anchor about the Pro-Choice issue. First of all, I would like to say that I personally respect the views of the author. She made some very good points and had very valid arguments.

But in reading the letter I felt that she took our organization (Hope Students for Choice) and our attempts to invite interested people to our meetings as a personal attack upon her own beliefs. A lot of people see abortion issue as a two sided coin. The issue is not black and white, it is far more complex than that. Pro-Choice does not stand for Pro-Abortion. Choice takes a realistic view that abortion is present in our society. It always has been and no legislative decisions in the future will stop them from occurring.

I speak for all the Choice people in saying that we would love to see the day when abortion is no longer necessary to protect a woman's health and life. It is as much a right for a woman to choose to abort as a man has the right to marry and love life. You may say that is a contradiction to what Choice stands for, but Choice respects the right for a person to make her own decisions based on her religious and moral beliefs. Her personal decision is therefore based on what is best for her life.

The fundamental difference between the two views is equivalent to comparing apples and oranges. I understand the Pro-Life argument to involve the definition of life at conception, and the importance of potentiality of a zygote. My view is that the definition of life lies within each person based on their own convictions.

Because science cannot pin-point the exact moment of life, abortion has always been an option for those who were willing to take the risk. It is not a sin against church and state. This is not an issue that can be argued right or wrong, there is a respect for each person. Therefore legal and safe abortions must remain available.

In the letter the argument was made that a woman has a Choice before she gets pregnant: "It is a matter of free choice whether or not to have sex in the first place (in most cases)." Even the most responsible people, who take great care in contraception run the risk of it failing. No contraception other than abstinence is 100 percent safe. We do not live in a perfect world, and sex is not something to simply be ignored.

In discussing the problem we must start at the roots, and the foundations of Choice which are in education. Until the day when we are educated enough in the area of reproduction, abortion is a reproductive right we cannot afford to lose. Women's lives are too important to be sacrificed to back alley abortions.

In conclusion, I would like to include that the author brought up the fact that she was adopted, and if abortion were legal she probably would not have been born. Her biases on this issue were also due to this fact.

I know and can identify with her feelings as I was adopted, too. I would also like to find the woman who brought me into the world. But I feel that the fact that I am adopted should not stand as a basis for me to inhibit other's reproductive rights. Our opinions do not speak for everyone.

Each person has his own life and a right to choose what is best for them. Some women are able to handle the emotional and physical consequences of carrying a pregnancy to term and giving it up for adoption. While some are not capable of this. Choice allows each woman the right for her own decision. Choice is necessary if you realistically look at the issue.

Sincerely,

Lara DeLamater

Pro-choice does not equal pro-abortion

Dear Editor,

This letter is a follow-up to the article "Students begin organizing gun education, lobbying group" that appeared in the Anchor last week. This letter is to inform the Hope College community of a new organization on campus, Pro-Choice or Pro-Life. The Pro-Choice for Women organization is a group with a similar ideology as the National Rifle Association (NRA).

Our primary goal is to promote gun education and to work along with the NRA to foster legislation that will ensure safe gun use. Through this we can promote safe gun use. SLIP OF THE MIND

Chronic Stress

JIM MONNETT

Do you suffer from chronic stress? Chronic stress manifests itself in the feeling that there is always something more pressing that you should be doing. You also may enjoy a constant pain in the shoulders and neck from tight muscles. Plus, the chronic stress sufferer may be truly honored by an ulcer, stomach cramps, a general sense of normalcy and decency that might have been lurking inside of you.

Back to the story: John had a golden rule about all the corners and most safety regulations that we cut to save time and money. As a prize and proper by the book freshperson, I would say in my quivering, mid-puberty voice, "Shouldn't we..." John would cut in with a quick, "Don't worry about it.

Don't Worry About It. That's the saying became my golden rule. I lived by them, built by them, ductaped split board by them, and I deeply internalized them. They became my creed.

Now when stress comes along, I Don't Worry About It. Papers, tests, deadlines, columns, newspaper typesetting failures, bailed stories and crotch-ripped jeans all get relegated to the Don't Worry About It pile. And I don't.

Unfortunately, my subconscious does. Hence the problem. Say hello to chronic stress. Ask me at any moment if I'm stressed. Most of the time I'll say Don't Worry About It; I can handle it. My mind disagrees, my shoulder muscles tighten, my stomach knots and my appetite dies (which may be construed as a blessing).

Sometimes the stress builds. I get the feeling that the next problem will push me over the edge. Hopefully, at this stage, I will acknowledge the stress and find some way to ease the pressure. This might entail buying my roommate over 90 percent of his body with a couch pillow, or writing Sigmund Freud or having a good rant, or just telling myself to Don't Worry About It. Wrong answer, but I do it anyway.

Occasionally, the tension gets too much. I reach my break point. Here I can go either way: I'm not afraid to admit it...to you. I'm a chronic stress sufferer. I'm not afraid to admit it...to you that is. I will not, though, admit it to myself. My mind likes to lie to itself.

This lying all started during high school set construction. As a wide-eyed freshperson, I was assigned to work with a jaded, unshaven, jeans and filannel shirt type junior. John became my mentor and probably deserves to share my firing squad for destroying any sense of normalcy and decency I think the house is haunted.

If you're into more of the old west, try Tortilla Flats, Arizona. This is a vintage old west ghost town, that has convenientlly been preserved. The high point of any visit to Tortilla Flats is going to the general store and pinning a dollar bill on the wall. The owners of this store have every available space on the wheels and ceiling of their store covered with dollar bills with the names and addresses and date placed on the wall written on the dollar bill. Go there and check it out, you might find that dollar that your best friend still owes you.

For those students who prefer to go south, try Petoskey, Michigan. See the brand new K-mart, dine indoors at the new Dairy Queen, and sleep in comfort at the new Day's Inn. But more importantly, see the most expensive piece of road work ever completed in the United States. Yes, I'm talking about US 31 through Bay View. You can marvel at the three narrow lanes, the expert painting of the lines, and the beauty of the pink cement used on the sidewalks and curbs. How could anyone resist? It's the perfect vacation site.
Devos Hall

Musicians, vocalists share talents at Musical Showcase

by Brian Paige
arts editor

The Hope College musical showcase featured the college's best musicians in a spectacular performance last week at DeVos Hall in Grand Rapids. Coordinated by the music department and public relations office, the musicians have rarely looked or sounded so professional.

The acoustics of DeVos were a special treat for the audience. From the opening whispering strains of a flute solo (performed by Kristen Koole) to the majestic sounds of the trumpet quintet, the sensitivity of the hall highlighted the group's musical capabilities.

The attendance for the event was surprisingly high and the audience seemed to be excited about the program. Indeed, the music was well played and the atmosphere was almost electric at times.

One high point in the concert came as the two vocalists, Katherine Grace and Chad Dykema, stunned the audience with an incredible interpretation of a scene from La Bohème, an opera by Giacomo Puccini. The use of voice and dramatization reflect the talent of both of these young musicians.

Another notable performance included a bassoon solo by Kelly Stratil. Stratil's performance of a work by Rachmaninoff was magical and captured the attention of the audience.

The Saxophone Quartet and Woodwind Quintet were not to be outdone as they presented light classical music and jazz which seemed to entertain and please their listeners.

All of the groups that performed at DeVos were dynamic in skill and quality and reflected the hundreds of hours of work that a musician typically puts into perfecting his ability, whether it be vocal or instrumental.

Also to be acknowledged for the outstanding performance are professors who spent many hours encouraging and instructing the students in preparation for the performance.

It was only fitting that at the end of the performance two of the music department's top scholars would be honored.

The first was Dr. Roger Davis, who served in the music department since 1963, and who recently died from cancer.

The second was Dr. Roger Rietberg, who will retire this year after serving the college in several different capacities for many years. Rietberg was given the opportunity to conduct the orchestra, and the combined voices of all the vocal groups and audience in singing the Alma Mater at the conclusion of the evening as an honor for his service to the college.
Rush gives dynamic performance

Bill Meengs  assistant editor

Playing to a sold-out crowd at the Palace of Auburn Hills, veteran Canadian rockers, Rush brought their Presto tour to a stop in Detroit.

Rush has long been known as a dynamic live act, and have three "live" albums to their credit. This time around, they were out in support of their latest studio album, "Presto".

The Palace was about half-full when warm-up band, Mr. Big took the stage, and soon after they started playing, the half of the people who had entered the arena wished that they hadn't.

Mr. Big gave a performance that would likely be bettered by any local garage band, and left people wondering what Mr. Big is doing with a record contract.

Mr. Big's songs contained borrowing, trite, and even stupid lyrics backed by somewhat simple top 40 heavy metal power chords.

Highlights of Mr. Big's performance were when the lead guitarist took a cordless power drill to his guitar during his solo (this has to do wonders for your strings) and when the bassist played a scale for his solo. In short, it was not a performance worthy of a warm-up for an established band like Rush.

The Palace has a 15 minute break between the two bands, since most of Rush's year had already been set up behind screens which kept things moving nicely.

Rush got things started by showing a cartoon clip entitled "Attack of the Killer Rabbits". This was shown on a large screen behind the band and on the Palace scoreboard "Palacevision".

Immediately after the opening cartoon, Rush launched into their opening number "Force 10" from the album "Hold Your Fire". While the opener was somewhat of a surprise (they'd been opening with "Big Money" on their past two tours), the biggest surprise was the song "Freewill" appearing as the second song in the set. "Freewill" comes from the 1980's "Permanente Waves" lp and Rush typically doesn't include older material so early in the set.

The group managed to include several old favorites into their two hour set. Highpoints included "Tom Sawyer", "Xanadu", "La Villa Strangiata", "Closer to the Heart", and even "In the Mood" from the band's very first album (the set also included several songs from their latest release, "Presto"). Of 13 studio albums, Rush performed material from 11 of them. Only the albums "Careers of Steel" and "Fly by Night" went unrepresented.

The sound was astounding, as the band used a surround sound system to totally take advantage of the superior Palace acoustics. At one point in the song "Marathon", it sounded as if the backing vocal vocals were circling around the arena.

The light show was also vintage Rush as several rotating lights and audience spots were used to enhance the music. The band also used laser lights to provide some awesome visual imagery to help back up the music.

Beyond the visual state of the art concepts of the show, the most important thing was that it was basically three guys having a good time jamming.

Guitarist, Alex Lifeson provided his usual power guitar and contributed backing vocals on several songs, drummer, Neil Peart, widely regarded as one of rock's best, was in his usual fine form. His drum solo in "YYZ" can only be described as drop-dead dazzling, period. Geddy Lee's voice was also in excellent shape and he seemed to truly enjoy interacting with the audience, flashing rabbit ears with the crowd, and spontaneously changing lyrics.

During the song "Scars", the group had two giant top hats placed on the stage. Giant rabbit balloons then proceeded to appear from within the hats. The most amazing part of this occurred during "Tom Sawyer", however, as these rabbits began to dance to the beat of the song.

Another high point was when the band broke into the song "Wipe Out" during the encore. The group played several instances of feedback. And while it was the group's first trip to the Palace, there really is no sense that that's what sound checks are for.

But, in the end, the band's sheer vocal, copy, and spare features were just enough to not only over come occasional poor sound, but to exceed the next warm-up groups as well.

After seeing Rush in concert, it's no wonder they continue to enjoy increasing success 20 years after their founding.

With a sound that incorporates jazz, a little bit of blues and a whole lot of British pop, the Blue Nile are headed for the top of the college charts with their album "Hats".

Anyone looking for the usual progressive dance music won't find it on this album. The Blue Nile's material is more of a mellow, easy listening sound but these songs won't put you to sleep, because there's an inner intensity to them that keeps you interested.

"Hats" is an album that will reach out and grab you. It's one of those albums you can listen to no matter what kind of mood you're in. The songs are somewhat long (all but one are over 5:00 in length), they do not

The album's shining stars, however, are the songs "Let's go out Tonight" and "Saturday Night". These songs were made for slow dancing and boyfriends. If you're looking to set a mood for a date, either one of these songs will serve to get you excited about going out.

"Saturday Night" is easily the best song on the album, and the ultimate love song. This hit in the tape deck when you're on your date and if it doesn't melt them, they've got ice in their veins. An infectiously beautiful song that is so hot it smolders.

The Blue Nile have come out with their own, and an outstanding album "Hats". They're easily one of the hottest new groups of the year. Throw "Hats" into your CD player and you'll put it on permanent loop. It's an album you'll wish would never end.

New comedy encourages thought

by Kris Olenski
staff writer

"Joe Versus the Volcano," starring Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan, is a surreal comedy adventure that's more than entertaining.

Directed by John Patrick Shanley and produced by Steven Spielberg, this film displays some eccentric humor and special effects accompanied by some humorous and thoughtful acting from the two stars.

Just from the title and the leading actors you have to expect it to be a little silly, and that's exactly what it is. But there's really more to it than that. There is a plot (as simple as it is), some very funny and unique characters, and even some symbolism. But in the end, you have to take it for what it's worth - entertainment.

The movie starts off slowly with Joe Banks (played by Tom Hanks) going to work just as he has done for years. Everything that can go wrong does, and we are led to believe that most of his life has been as gray as this one scene is.

The scene is dull and it drags on, just as Joe's life does, but right away there are some absurdities like a music box lamp with a tropical scene on its shade that he uses as a desk lamp. Touches like this hint of something deeper than humor, lurking near by.

Joe's life is miserable as is his. On one of many visits to his doctor, Joe finds out that he has a brain cloud, a mysterious disease with no symptoms, and he only has six months to live. His only response to this is, "So you're telling me that there's nothing wrong with me except for this terminal disease I have."

There is no cure and the doctor's advice to Joe is to live life to the fullest while he can.

This is shocking to Joe, so much so that it jars him into realizing that his life is a joke and he needs to change. He goes to quit his job explaining to his boss and two co-workers how "dead" he's been and that he's been a coward, afraid to do anything else. Then, after being afraid for seven years, he finally asks this spacy woman who he's been working with to go out with him. She is one of three characters that Meg Ryan plays excellently.

The next day a stangely exuberant man, played by Lloyd Bridges, comes to ask Joe to jump into a volcano. He is a business tycoon who needs someone to do this in order to appease the people on the island where the volcano is located. Joe knows all about Joe's condition as well as Joe's previous experience as a brave fireman. So he challenges him to perform this stunt and die like a man since he's going to die anyway.

Joe accepts, and along the way he meets some unique people who help him transform from an average Joe into a thoughtful, much more alive Joe. Two of these characters are the business tycoon's daughters who are also played by Meg Ryan.

The first one he meets in Los Angeles and she is a typical spoiled Californian, living off her rich father and hating it. Joe is only with her for a day because she is only there to take him to the scene. Amidst all of that, somehow there is a trace of seriousness as well. There are some dialogues between Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan playing soul-searching individuals that give the movie some meaning and purpose.

There are real-life principles surrounded by a bizarre plot filled with rare characters and fake special effects that are made to be laughable.

You have to like Tom Hanks and his humor, as well as Meg Ryan in order to enjoy the movie. You can't expect too much from this movie, it exists only to entertain and, if you want to look deeper, to encourage you to really live and not just go through the motions.

Over 100 people turned out to see Hope's own Nancy Taylor in her first poetry reading last Thursday night in Cook Auditorium. "It's as if I hand-picked you," Taylor told the audience which was very responsive to her work. Taylor, who has only been writing poetry for a year and a half read "Harley Girls," and "Saluting the Clackety-Clack" among other pieces.

Submarine thriller delivers excellence

staff writer

Sean Connery stars in the movie version of Tom Clancy's novel, "The Hunt for Red October," as Captain Marko Alexandrovich Ramius, commander of the Red October, the first of a new breed of Soviet submarines created solely for its first strike capability.

Captain Ramius, fearing that the Red October, which can run faster and quieter than any other submarine in the world, would be used to start another "War to end all wars," defects to the United States and his giant sub over to the Americans.

With the help of his chief officers, the Red October disappears.

The Kremlin is quite put out when they hear this an immediately send their entire navy to hunt it down and destroy it. Hence, the title.

O.K., the Kremlin, fearing that the Americans will get the submarine, fabricate a story to make the Americans think that our buddy, Captain Ramius is a lunatic and is going to destroy good ol' U.S.A. They believe him, of course, and start our own hunt for the Red October. Hence, the title.

But wait sports fans! There's another player in the game and his name is Jack Ryan (played by Alec Baldwin). Ryan, a civilian, submarine specialist and strategist believes that Ramius is actually trying to defect and while trying to convince our government of this "feeling," he gets thrown into the midst of the fiasco. Ryan is given three days to show that he is right, and if he doesn't the U.S. Navy blows up Ramius. Sounds fun, doesn't it?

O.K., enough of the story. I don't want to give the rest of the movie away because all in all, it was really a very good movie. The plot had so many twists to it that it kept me on the edge of my seat the entire time. The character, and yet quite believable among the main characters.

Baldwin was excellent. His character held strong to his beliefs right through to the climactic ending.

Connery was hot. But then again, he's always hot. He did however, play this role with an extra hotness. His character knew what he had to do, and saw it through to the end too, I especially like it when Connery and Baldwin meet. It was like seeing total opposites in appearance and yet feeling that they were both identical in thought and reason.

There were some small discrepancies such as when the sovietas began to speak English after having spoken Russian for the first half hour of the show.

The music, special effects, characterization, and story line outweighed any discrepancies and all in all the movie was a quite enjoyable movie.
Lydian Quartet well attended but far from spectacular showing

by Brian Paige
arts editor

The Lydian String Quartet demonstrated some of their international kudos when they performed in the second to last Great Performance Series concert last Thursday.

The concert, held in the Dimnent Memorial Chapel, was well attended, but lacked the excitement that makes concerts especially memorable.

The quartet was difficult to listen to because of the amount of concentration the music selection required. With such noted credentials, it was disappointing that the group did not exhibit their skill with a different music selection.

The second piece in their program, the String Quartet No. 2 (1987) by contemporary composer John Harbison, builds to a climax through dissonance and seemingly ends unresolved, leaving the listener on edge. The piece is assuredly a reflection of the era in which it was written.

The other selections, one by Mozart, the other by Beethoven, were appropriate for the mood and audience.

Besides music selection, the technical precision of the group was noteworthy. All four members exhibited agility, control and some expression, but it seemed the music lacked the sensitivity that makes music an art and not a science.

The Quartet is unique in that it performs with well known period instruments. Daniel Stepner plays an Antonin Gragnani violin made in 1727. Judith Eisenberg's violin was made in 1760 by Nicolo Gagliano. Mary Ruth Ray plays a Hungarian viola constructed by Otto Erdesz. Rhonda Rider's cello was crafted in 1740 by Andreas Castagneri.

Far from spectacular, the Lydian String Quartet still presented a concert worth attending if even only for the important examples of skill and musicianship.

The final Great Performance Series concert, featuring the Paul Winter Consort, will be held on Friday, April 6, at 8 pm in the Dimnent Memorial Chapel.

Hope junior excels in swimming

Jilanne Bannink has been one of the most prominent forces on the women's swimming team this year.

A junior physical education major from Holland, Bannink headed for the NCAA Division III Swimming Championships in Williamston, Massachusetts, last Tuesday after winning three gold medals and being a part of three winning medley teams at the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association conference meet at Alma College Feb. 22-24.

She is competing in those six events at the championships. In individual events she swims distance freestyle and individual medley.

Bannink began swimming competitively at age seven in a community wide swimming group. Her family was a great source of support. Her brothers and sisters are all swimmers and her parents are runners. At college, she has been on the women's swimming team all three years as well as being a member of the women's cross-country team.

This is her third straight year at Nationals for swimming and has also gone to Nationals twice for cross-country. Bannink's goals for the swimming championships this year are to place in her individual events and to finish in the top eight in the medley events. Bannink admits that it is often difficult to balance schoolwork, swim practice, and her social life. But she said her closest friends are swimmers or live with her and she can spend time with them that way.

Though Bannink has had a very successful year, she feels she is not swimming up to her potential. Due to her involvement in the cross-country team in the fall, she missed the first two months of swim practice.

"If I want to do both swimming and cross-country, it's hard to reach my potential in either one," she said. "There's always room for improvement." And improvement is just what she's been accomplishing. Bannink credits the team's support and high morale as a key to her personal improvement.

Most of all, she recognizes coach John Patnott as an important part of her swimming success. She appreciates his patience and also his ability to motivate swimmers to perform above their standard level. "He knows you can do better than what you think you can do," said Bannink. "He lets you know that he has faith that you can attain certain goals.

When not swimming, studying, or running, Bannink enjoys reading, playing piano, and cycling. She also has developed an interest in triathlon, a combination of her interests in running, swimming, and cycling, and will compete in a triathlon in Grand Rapids next month.

Volleyball Club doused by Trinity

by Rochelle Anderson

Sports editor

Hope's men's volleyball club was defeated by Trinity Christian College last Friday at the Dow Center in three straight games, 15-4, 15-11, 15-9.

Missing three starters, Hope started the match with Ward Holloway, Brian Pietenpol, Mike Gibson, Brian Keising, Aaron Boyd and Eric Lundquist. Dave Macintyre was out with an injured foot and Kurt Slater was out for the season.

In the first game, both teams struggled to retain possession of the serve and Trinity scored the first point. Hope scored immediately after, but could not create a string of points. Trinity powered their way through the next six points, making the score 7-1.

Both teams took turns serving, but neither could find the power to put the ball to the floor. Trinity scored the next three points and looked to finish the game, but Pietenpol set Gibson and he pounded the ball to the floor. The score was 12-1 before Hope could add to their score with Holloway adding one. The under the net calls plagued Hope throughout the match and despite a double block by Keising and Gibson and two more points, the game belonged to Trinity.

The second game found Hope more ready to play, but determination was not the only factor. Hope started with the serve, but Dave VanderMeer of Trinity spiked the ball from the far side and Trinity took the momentum scoring the first three points.

The plays became longer as both teams warmed up and Pietenpol served two for Hope making the score 3-2. Trinity played continuously without score until Steve Ramsey served two more for Hope which gave them the lead for the first time. Gibson added one before Trinity went on a four point streak to gain the lead back 7-5.

The momentum switched from side to side until Pietenpol served four including an ace. Trinity took a time-out trailing Hope 10-9. They returned and added three more points before losing possession of the ball. Ramsey served the last point for Hope and Gibson made the point with a cross court spike that Trinity could not return. Trinity's power carried them through the second game winning it 15-11.

The third game started much like the first two with Trinity taking an early lead. Once again, Pietenpol served the points to put Hope back in the game. With the score in Trinity's favor 5-4, a double net foul was called and a replay was called.

The next spurt by Hope came in the middle of the game when Lundquist served two and Holloway pounded a cross court spike. This was the last string of points Hope could muster, but they played consistently throughout the match. The lack of hard hitting on Hope's part and the height and power of Trinity contributed to the loss.
LaCrosse club seeks experience in Florida

by Jon O'Brien

The LaCrosse Club will be very active this spring break while they repeat their annual events in Florida.

The team is coached by three seniors: Craig Kozler, Mike Schanhals, and Tom Theil. The team captain is Bill Clinkton.

The LaCrosse Club will compete 17 meets this year, ten of which will be at home. The team has 46 members most of whom are juniors and sophomores. There are 30 returning players form last year's Conference Championship team, which had a 6-0 record. The team includes two women, Stacey Penzin and Leslie Hayden.

The coaches are hopeful and confident. The club is hoping to become a varsity sport within the next two years. In order for a club to turn varsity it needs four other teams in the conference were maturing.

Throughout the week, the team will be staying in Port Richie just 30 miles north of Tampa. They will compete against some East Coast teams; Trinity, Williams, and Hartford colleges, that already have established programs. Hope will also compete against Amherst and Wittenburg colleges.

"All teams are in Division III varsity programs. We will be able to keep up with all teams, but expect results that go with playing superior programs," said Kozler.

Kozler said that like any other growing team, the experience of the meets will be more important than any win/lose record.

"It is crucial to get outside practice. We have three games a week when we return," said Kozler.

Currently the team practices in the gym. There are two squads, A and B, that are divided by ability.

Kozler added that if any students were interested in seeing a meet over spring break, they should contact one of the coaches or the captain before they leave.

ZENITH INNOVATES AGAIN — WITH THE NEW Z-286 LP — THE AT COMPATIBLE THAT TRANSPORTS YOUR BUSINESS INTO THE FUTURE!

If your business needs AT power now, but could use advanced MS-OS/2™ performance in the future, then you really need the new Z-286 LP Desktop PC from Zenith Data Systems — today's leading supplier of high-speed AT compatibles.

As the one desktop computer that can keep pace with your company's growing data processing requirements, the Zenith Data Systems Z-286 LP lets you harness 286 speed and power in a surprisingly compact design that'll only take up as much space on your desk as most monitors.

You'll find the new Z-286 LP compatible with thousands of AT peripherals...and virtually all MS-DOS® software. But that's not all. The Z-286 LP also gives you the capability to move up to the new MS-OS/2 technology whenever you feel your business is ready for more advanced performance.

The Zenith Data Systems Z-286 LP also comes complete with 1MB RAM — expandable to 6MB without using an expansion slot. Plus a single 3.5" 1.44MB floppy disk drive that lets you "read and write" 720K floppy disks. And a fast 40MB hard disk to handle your heavy-duty word processing, large spreadsheets and huge databases for thousands of pages of information. Plus, the Z-286 LP comes standard with one parallel and two serial ports for peripheral devices.

So transport your business through time with the one desktop computer that can keep up with you. Get the Zenith Data Systems Z-286 LP today. And start thinking like a true innovator!
