12-1-1898

The Anchor, Volume 12.03: December 1, 1898

Hope College

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.hope.edu/anchor_1898

Part of the Library and Information Science Commons

Recommended Citation

http://digitalcommons.hope.edu/anchor_1898/10
Volume 12, Issue 3, December 1, 1898. Copyright © 1898 Hope College, Holland, Michigan.

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Anchor: 1890-1899 at Digital Commons @ Hope College. It has been accepted for inclusion in Anchor: 1898 by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Hope College. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@hope.edu.
DECEMBER, 1898.

The Anchor

HOPE COLLEGE,
HOLLAND, MICHIGAN
J. C. HERKNER JEWELRY CO.

The Leaders.

Manufacturers of EMBLEMS and SOCIETY JEWELRY.

82 Monroe St., Grand Rapids.

J. Kloosterman,
....TAILOR....

Will do the neatest job for you in Cleaning, Repairing and Pressing your Suits.

PRICES REASONABLE.

THE Holland Tea Store,

JOHN VAN ZANTEN, Prop.

Teas, Coffees, Extracts, and Baking Powder.

Bell Phone 47. Ottawa 156.

NORTH RIVER ST.

Footwear...

In the Latest Styles and lowest Prices.

REPAIRING Neatly done at our store.

Come and see us.

S. Sprietsma.

THE ANCHOR.

"Spray in Buz."—Ps. XLII. 5.

VOLUME XII.

DECEMBER, 1898.

NUMBER 3

Rev. Peter J. Zwemer.

No age is sure of immunity from death. The last enemy will attack every individual. It makes no difference what position in society a person occupies, or how peculiar his circumstances are, no one can stay his hand. The pi ous and the ungodly, the talented and the sluggish rec e i ve the same treatment from
him. The King of terror pays no
more respect
to the one than to the other. Marry a bright blossom of the church
h a s b e e n
nipped off
by his relentless hand.

We know not what a day may bring forth, and we cannot calculate upon an hour.

But there is always something afflecting in the passing away of young men. Their very youth adds an element of bitterness to the cup which their surviving relatives are made to drink. To see such a noble flower as Zwemer droop its head upon its stalk,
wither and die, causes great grief.
The family will miss him, the Church will miss him. It is not so hard to see the aged leave the scene of earth. When a man has reached the Bible limit of three score and ten and then expires, we are not surprised. We rather expect it and are prepared for it, and if they have the ungodly.
the talented,
and the sluggish rec e i ve the same treatment from
him. The King of terror pays no
more respect
to the one than to the other. Marry a bright blossom of the church
h a s b e e n
nipped off
by his relent-
less hand.

We know not what a day may bring forth, and we cannot calculate upon
an hour.

But there is always something afflecting in the passing away of young
men. Their very youth adds an element of bitterness to the cup which
their surviving relatives are made to drink. To see such a noble flower as Zwemer droop its head upon its stalk,
wither and die, causes great grief.
The family will miss him, the Church
will miss him. It is not so hard to see the aged leave
the scene of earth. When a man has reached the Bible limit
of three score and ten and then expires, we are not surprised. We rather expect it and are prepared for it, and if they have the ungodly.
the talented,
and the sluggish rec e i ve the same treatment from
him. The King of terror pays no
more respect
to the one than to the other. Marry a bright blossom of the church
h a s b e e n
nipped off
by his relent-
less hand.

We know not what a day may bring forth, and we cannot calculate upon
an hour.

But there is always something afflecting in the passing away of young
men. Their very youth adds an ele-
cation and was ready to take up his life work. His talents excited the liveliest hope of success. Very early in life he had an intense desire to be of some service to his Master. That desire never left him. It became stronger and stronger as the years rolled on. And now looking over his life and studying his makeup, there was a constant preparation for this noblest and most blessed work of bringing the Gospel to the heathen. As long as I knew him, he always impressed me with his manliness, his magnanimity, his piety, his unselfishness, his consecration. His virtues were admired. His sterling worth was envied by many. Little did he care for the pleasure of this life. His mind was absorbed in higher things. Knowing this, he had no sympathy with anything that had the appearance of sham. He hated all hollow pretense and empty profession. He was generous, honest and sincere. The Bible was his precious book. Faithfully and prayerfully did he study it. He was ever striving to do God's will, and was very happy when he could be of some service to others. During summer vacations he would go about selling Bibles, often remaining in the humble abodes of poor people, reading and explaining truth and ever pointing them to that higher life. He experienced great joy and satisfaction in associating with such people and thus became one of God's barley leaves to feed dying souls.

At college he was an inspiration. Conscientious in his curriculum work, he never shirked duty. He applied himself to all tasks and would do his best. With painstaking effort he overcame many obstacles, and when he graduated from Hope he had risen to an enviable rank. During these years there was ample opportunity to test his missionary zeal. Had it abated any? Not at all. It took a stronger hold upon him than ever before. The spirit for missions fairly burned in him. The more he read and heard about the condition of the heathen the more enthusiastic he became. He entered the Seminary with that in mind, and when he had finished his course then, nothing could deter him from following up the work of his heart's desire. While here, he wrote me, saying that he thought it so strange that out of a class of fifteen only two were found willing to carry the banner of the cross over the blue deep to those living in the darkness of heathendom.

Arabia was his chosen field for toil, whither his brother had preceded him. His heart was in his work. His energies were directed toward and converged in one thing and that made him successful. Everything had to bend and bow for the one end he had in view. In Muscat he laid the foundation for his mission premises and work. His character made a deep impression on the Moslem minds. Within a very few months many who came in touch with him seemed to realize that their religion did not do for them what Christianity promised to do for them. As a result, the gospel in Arabia found both purchasers and readers in those who had read in this man the living epistle of God.

Perhaps no testimony of the influence of the Arabian mission can be stronger than the fact that Dr. Wyckhoff had spent two weeks in that neighborhood, treating something like three hundred patients. He said: "One can hardly believe the tremendous impression these three young men, Revs. S. M. and P. J. Zwemer and James Cantine, have made in so short a time. It seems as though the whole of Arabia had come under their influence." In his own words, "An entrance has been made into the very heart of Islam. In faith Arabia has been pre-empted by the Church, and, through fanaticism scorns and ignorance misjudges, the seed is being sown, and the questions of the Kingship and Sonship of Christ are being discussed by the Moslem pilgrim on his way to Mecca."

But the Arabian fever proved a fatal foe. The frequent attacks prostrated him. The climate and unsanitary conditions had a telling effect on his health. When he left for that country he was strong and robust. For six years he was at his post and proved himself a hero. But his stalwart constitution gave way and on Oct. 8 he sank into a quiet slumber and could no more be awakened. God's finger touched him and he was called to go up higher.

Did he live in vain? Indeed not. He finished his task, but the work will go on. The seed was sown, and in His own good time will bring forth an hundredfold. Thirty years seems a short time, and yet much can be accomplished. His death should send an electric shock through the whole Church.

HENRY GEERING, '88.

William Shakespeare.

A n undergraduate to write on Shakespeare! Long years of laborious study serve but to introduce; and a critical estimate of the "myriad-minded" has value only then, when it is the result of a lifetime's study. Such a criticism is based on what is found in Shakespeare. But is there not another method, open to the beginner, of forming a helpful estimate of Shakespeare? For example, some study of Shakespeare, more of criticism devoted to him, and most of all of the intention of literature. These two methods may be expressed thus: the first, Shakespeare must be great because his characteristics are these; the second, his characteristics must be these, because Shakespeare is great. The first method is thorough; the second, in a sense, superficial. And yet may it not serve as a useful guide for future study? This essay is based on a study after the second method. A critical study of an author is an attempt to determine his literary merit. To succeed, the critic ought to have thoroughly in mind what literature is, or, at the very least, his conception of literature. I believe we are wont to conceive of literature far too meanly. In criticism we exalt manner at expense of matter, and believe our work is done, if we have pointed out the happiest instances of phraseology and imagery, the liquidity of diction and movement, or the intricacies and mazes of plot. We are content with the bur and forget the kernel. Literature is more than form; it is thought and emotion. Form is essential but only incidental; for form, which is style in its wider acceptation, is the objective embodiment of the qualities of thought and emotion. "Literature," as quoted by Prof. Sherman, "is the sum of the thoughts and feelings and experiences of the race that have been recognized as valuable beyond the moment of their first utterance, and hence been treasured up for further use."

With this view of literature in general, what are we to look for especially in poetry? True poetry belongs to the highest literature, the literature of power, coming from the heart, designed for the heart. In the words of Matthew Arnold, "Poetry is the noble and profound application of ideas to life". The poet's subject must be human life; further than this, it is an application of ideas to life, not to portray actual life but to mold it to ideas. The poet must have a message: in proportion as his message is noble and profound, in proportion as it is true and universal, in proportion as it tends to uplift man and aid him in the wilderness of life to the consummation of his high destiny, just in that proportion is a poet great.

In accord with this view I have tried to select those co-prehensive marks which characterize Shakespeare as an author and give him his place in literature.

The first characteristic of Shakespeare is fidelity. You may call it truth relative, naturalness, or keeping. I said a moment ago that thought is literature, thought and emotion. That is subjective. In the objective sense we have literature only when there is an incarnation of the qualities of thought and emotion. Wherever we have the most helpful thought or the most ennobling emotion expressed is such language as is best adapted to express its finer shades, there we have the best, the greatest literature. I trust it will now appear what I mean by Shakespeare's fidelity. When Emerson says of Shakespeare's verse, "the secret is that the thought constructs the tune"; when Welsh says, "he had no system, no mannerism, but the true secret of blank verse—the adaptations of words and rhythms to the sense in them", they only emphasize Shakespeare's fidelity. In criticising men speak of the delightful play of his fancy, his splendid power of his imagination, his genuineness of his emotion; they say that his characters are natural, that his plot is natural; while in a study of Homer and the Greek dramatists it stands today, not because Homer and Shakespeare observed it, but because in our journey through life, shut in by the gloom of our origin, with but here and there a rift of light in the darkness that shrouds our ultimate destiny, we have not time for particular, individual characteristics, but can concern ourselves only with the universal soul of man in its doubts and hopes and fears, the same now as when first the angel barred the gates of Eden.

I am at a loss for a word to express the third characteristic of Shakespeare. Perhaps it is best expressed when I say that in him there is an application of ideas to life. His work bears on the question, "How to live?" This after all is the most important part. Were his descriptions never so true, were his types never so perfect, and lacked this, he were but tinkling brass and a clanging cymbal. A work of art must show design adapted to an end; and in proportion as the end is noble the art is noble. And what can be nobler than to teach men how to live? If we fail to notice this in Shakespeare, we lose the better part, the pearl of great price. To illustrate his teaching; we have, e. g., in Macbeth the progress of moral poisoning, in Lear "passion unrestrained and terrible rising into colossal proportions." If one were familiar enough with Shakespeare, he might venture to sum up his message, as that of Dante, "the return of the deed upon the doer." To quote Welsh, "underlying his works and penetrating them all is the moral law."

Richard Steele.

The Anchor.

After Two Years in India

They say it takes two years for a new missionary to learn that he knows nothing of missionary work, so if I have learnt my lesson well you may expect a brief report at the end of this my second year. But I believe I have learnt also some positive facts.

It has been a hard year for India. "War, famine, and pestilence", and earthquakes in some parts, have ravaged our fair country from one end to the other. The war, which was only on the northwestern frontier, is at an end. The famine was not so severe with us as in some other parts, yet the Century plant, as we call it at home.

ly made its millet, etc., are smiling in the poor peasantry, causing a corresponding smile to light as if by reflection on their pinched faces. But the pestilence, the plague, oh dreadful word! Whisper it softly lest the gods should hear and be offended. For a long time confined to Bombay, Poona and a few other places, it has suddenly made its appearance in Calcutta, Bangalore and other cities and is now at the doors of Madras. A few imported cases have occurred within the bounds of the Arcot Mission. We hope and earnestly pray that we may be spared.

To depict the condition of India religiously is no easy matter. In order that you at home may rightly view the matter, it should be remembered that the masses, the countless millions of India, are yet steeped in superstition and idolatry. Nor do they welcome the light of truth for they love darkness rather. Here is where we are apt to miscalculate. We sometimes think the heathen will receive the message of their deliverance with joy and enthusiasm and will come to light and freedom with a shout. But just as in the stricken cities they fear the inoculator more than the plague, and as many will rather starve than receive food from a common supply and thus lose their cast, so we need not wonder that they listen with ill-will to a message concerning spiritual food and spiritual freedom. Besides this, almost many are convinced of the truth and convicted of sin, yet so blunt is their material sense that they have never known to act up to their conviction. I recall a story that I heard in college of a young man in India asking a missionary how long he had known the way of salvation and if his father and grandfather had known it, and, on the missionary answering in the affirmative, asking: ‘Why did not your grandfather tell me your grandfather about it?’ This story is completely matched by an incident that I witnessed a day or two ago when Dr. Scudder and I were preaching in a little village. He said: ‘Fifty years ago my grandfather came here and preached among you, and after him my father for nearly forty years came often to this village, and now I have come and have told you often and often of salvation through Jesus. Why will you not receive the message? Why will you not come?’ Thus we speak of gospel-hardened sinners at home; we have them here also.

And yet the outlook from our point of view is encouraging. Reports come from all over the land of the thousands who are weekly joining Christianity. Joining Christ often seems to come later as they begin to understand the real significance of his death and resurrection. But they come, and the significance of their coming is great even tho the motives are not always the best. They are still ignorant and superstitious; they know not how to keep the external commands of the law, and their conception of spiritual truth is disappointingly low. But they have given up their idols and their temples and many of their heathen customs and they observe the Sabbath and perform acts of worship and prayer to an Unseen Being. Is not this a great step forward? They submit to instruction in Divine things from the Word of God, and to them it is the Word of God, with no attention to Higher Criticism. They have come to Christ’s school and sooner or later will learn of him.

Speaking of the spiritual life in our village congregations, the Rev. W. H. Campbell writes as follows:

‘At first—giving my own experience—one’s attention is absorbed by the outward and apparent results. The crowded chapels and the interest, one might say the enthusiasm, displayed on the occasion of a visit from the missionary, make everything appear in a most rosy light. A little later, as one goes in and out among the people, and discovers the grosser forms of sin among them, he is apt to take a different view of the situation. To go from village to village, to find in one place or two cases of gross immorality, in another more than a suspicion of theft, in a third a serious quarrel in which almost every one seems involved; to be brought face to face with foul abuse and unblushing falsehood and a mass of jealousy and envy and spite among people who call themselves Christians this is apt to rob the picture of its brightness and bring even the most sanguine and enthusiastic to a condition of mind very near akin to despair. A wider outlook and a deeper insight prove this view to be as faulty and one-sided as that which confined itself to the mere surface of life. When we realize the slowness of the Divine working and remember how, after centuries of Christian training and discipline, we are still so far from living the true Christ-life, we can rise above our disappointment and rejoice in the extent to which God has delivered his poor degraded children from the bondage of old evil habits and brought them into contact and communion with Himself.’

The attitude of the educated classes towards Christianity is largely that of the elder son in the parable. Some of them seem to be not far from the kingdom of heaven, but they will not come in and make merry with their poor despised brethren. There are two distinct classes of the educated: those who have received an English education in Mission or Government schools, and those who are learned in Sanscrit and other vernaculars and in all Hindu learning, but know little or nothing of Western science. The latter have not been influenced by Christian thought; they are opposed to Christianity, of course, but for the most part are heartily indifferent to it. Among the English educated classes you find many disciples of Spencer or of Ingersoll—agnostics or pronounced atheists. Others are admirers of the ethical teaching of Christ and of His own noble life, while a few are his secret followers. Here and there we see individuals with conviction and courage enough to join the ranks of Christ openly. I have met and conversed with a number of the educated non-Christians. Some are students in college and some have passed (not into active life but) into government... positions. Most of them are friendly and responsive and not adverse to being spoken to about Christ. There are interesting and hopeful cases among them. Too little is being done for this class, too little is being prayed for them.

But am I not right in thinking that the interest of the home church is greatest in the direct evangelistic work among the heathen, those countless millions who are dying daily without the gospel? It has been my privilege this year to engage in just this work and to sound the name of Christ for the first time in the ears of thousands. Pitching our tents fifteen to twenty-five miles away from home in the midst of a circle of villages, and going out in the early morning, we find no trouble in gathering an audience of from thirty to three hundred in each village, to whom we bring the message of salvation. The field has been utterly neglected hitherto. The appearance of a foreigner who talks Tamil is interesting to the people, but their lack of comprehending the truth is strikingly and painfully clear. A week or ten days in a place is sufficient for our purpose. By the help of a map and by personal inquiries we find out where the villages are and visit each of them with two or three assistants. We stay for one or two hours, which is usually as long as we can keep up their attention, altho we frequently repeat the visit after a few days. We make a great deal of selling tracts and Bible portions, from twenty to fifty daily, which I consider perhaps the best part of our work. They may then read and reflect, but they still need a Philip to expound the Word unto them. Thus the Gospel has been preached to a hundred thousand or more, and we ask—with what result? I don't know just what the effect would have been on Mr. Spurgeon's theology or on his faith had he been called to labor here, and had he then expected souls to be converted with each sermon, as he once said one ought to expect. To my knowledge, not a soul has been converted, not a village has thrown away its idols,—altho several will probably do so soon. But there are two things that have especially sustained me in this work: first, the happy thought that I am personally fulfilling the last express command of Christ—"preach this gospel, be witnesses of me to all nations"; and second, I believe that these people are better prepared for the coming of our Lord which will be soon. For we tell them of a Jesus who has come, not only, but who will come, with power and glory to reward every man according to his works. And I believe that to those who have not formally rejected Him now, there will be an opportunity of accepting him then. Our work is to prepare them for their acceptance of Him at His coming. "Be ye also ready."—H. HUXLEY, '93.

Ramnemal, India, Oct. 1, 1898.

THE ANCHOR.
not forget that they were only the first steps, as it were, out of total darkness. They were the crude experiments along paths as yet untried. We must remember that if we had not had these experiences to guide us, we would not have been able to attain our present knowledge. The first thing was to decide that the people should be taught. After this the discussion as to what is the best way to educate.

This is still an open question, and is being discussed at the present time from all points of view. Of course, it is agreed now that the development of the mind is the chief thing, and not how many facts the memory can be made to hold. But this question still remains. What is the best way of attaining this development? The best way is the most natural one. If we wish to make a plant grow strong and vigorous, we place it in the best conditions possible, and leave it to do its own growing; if we were to force it we would only weaken it. This same principle holds in regard to the mind. It will naturally develop in the right conditions. But to force such a mind, to cram it with a mass of half-digested facts, is the surest way to stunt its growth and render it incapable of doing any efficient work.

Among the Societies.

EDITED BY JOHN WOODELINE, '92.

Instead of the usual notes which have been heretofore inserted in this column, we propose to make a new departure by substituting an original or essay prepared for one of the societies. The following is an oration delivered before the Cosmopolitan Society, Oct. 21, 1896.

LUTHER AT WORMS.

RUTH always finds its champion. When its influence seems about to cease forever, heroes step forth to save it. "Truth cruised to earth shall rise again." From age to age, in every clime, among all races, it has been hated, its progress has been contested, but only ultimately to gain a greater victory by its own innate power inspiring its champion. And whether on the field of battle, whether in council halls before kings and princes, everywhere, under all conditions and circumstances, it has come forth triumphant.

Thus with the mention of Luther and Worms, one of the world's great dramas presents itself. And because the reasons for its occurrence were many and great, because the occasion itself demanded the most heroic self-denial, for these reasons its influence has been almost unlimited.

Another critical moment had come in the world's history. In fact, every age has its crisis. When the Greeks thrust back the Persians, that was the crisis of the age, because it meant that mind and not matter should rule Europe. The battle of Tours was the crisis of its age, because it decided that Europe should be Christ's in preference to Mohammed's. The hour at Worms was likewise momentous. It was momentous because another climax had been reached in the struggle between truth and error; it was momentous because eternal principles were at stake: because the circumstances were oppressive: because the outcome meant the advancement or deterioration of the human race.

The sources whence sprang this event were numerous. Like the river issuing from a single fountain, but uniting with many rivulets as it ripples down the mountain side, so the causes leading to this event were many. On the one hand were the general immorality of mankind: a corrupted priesthood, the intrigues of courts; on the other, a broader view of the world than heretofore, a groping for light amid dense darkness, a great enthusiasm for knowledge. Like a flower awakening from its wintry sleep, and gradually unfolding its petals to the full blossom, so men's intellects and hearts were awakened, and opening to receive the light emanating from the dead past, made alive in the Renaissance. There was general dissatisfaction. A change of conditions must come. Truth long trampled upon must rise above the horizon. An agent through which it might act was wanting.

Thus was Luther called to be witness and defender of truth. His was the glorious task of accomplishing what Wycliff, Huss and the Waldenses had begun but could not complete.

Now conditions had changed. The stream had continued to tumble down the mountain and had become an irresistible power in the valley below.

The memorable spring of 1540 has come. Everywhere the dark clouds of religious strife are rising. Luther, at the summons of the Emperor, starts on his journey for Worms. He is reminded of Huss; his friends beseech him not to go. "Were there as many Dives at Worms as tiles on the roof, yet will I go." The old city looms up in the distance. He enters its wide open gates, passes up one street, down another, into the great hall; he stands before the world. A vast throng surrounds him. Europe has met. The splendor of priest-ridden Italy; the wealth and pomp of bigoted Spain; the fickleness of France; the solidarity and solemnity of Germany—all have met to behold one man oppose, yea, more than oppose, defeat his enemies legion.

The trial of the age is on. In the magnificence of its display, in the variety of class representation, in the measure of hope and fear, selfish pride and truest self-denial present—it has seldom been surpassed. When and where was there ever gathered together in one assembly, such a list of royalty, of papal officials from the pharisaical Archbishop down to the licentious priest and the blind, groveling sensual monk? And when and where were there ever collected in the same assembly such heroic, fearless men as Elector Frederick and his companions, supporting the right hand and the left hand of this champioin of righteousness and truth?
We are at Worms. We hear the question asked, "Are these your writings?" and the answer following, "I confess they are the works of my hand." We hear the cry, "Recant!"; and we see a man draw himself up, as only fearless innocence can, and calmly say, "If they are proven from Holy Scripture to be false, I am ready." We see the man wrestling with his God. We hear the triumphant utterance, after all enticement, all threatening, all inward cursing and outward contemp has failed—"I have prayed to God, I will not recant. Here I stand, I can do no other way; God help me."

Thus was laid the foundation of modern progress. After ages of enthralment, pressed under the heel of tyranny, overwhelmed with deadly fear by Papal bullys and Imperial edicts, the long enslaved conscience was once more set free. Here was an opportunity to cast off the shackles of spiritual bondage; now was the hour come to set the captive free. Freedom had come, slavery must go—freedom, of which David sang and Solomon wrote, for which Paul suffered and Peter was persecuted and John was banished to lonely Patmos. For this freedom the song of triumph swelled through the valleys of the Alps; for this, the Dutch opened the dikes, and welcomed in the sea; for this "God blew with the winds", and the invincible Armada was shattered. Driven hither and thither by persecution, departing from one land only to reappear in another, now apparently overcome, crushed by vice and immorality, this molder, this inspirer, this savior of the human race, was once more defended and introduced to the world to continue its mission of hope. As a result it has brought war, not peace. It brought the fagot, the rack, the Spanish inquisition on the one hand; on the other, it gave to England renown in her list of statesmen and poets; it has changed Scotland from a desert into a garden; it made brave little Holland one of the most enlightened commonwealths of the ages; because of it, America has attained her power and honor and progress, leaving far behind Roman Catholic countries on the same continent. To-day, this principle is still struggling to save not only the individual, but nations as well. It, indeed, brought war and suffering and tears, but only to satisfy the soul ever aspiring upward and onward.

Such has been the result of this immortal deed. But could it be otherwise? Could the truth emanating from God himself perish or be overcome by error? Men may hate it; they may strive to blot out its power; but all in vain, because O nipotence gave and no man taketh away. And as the days lengthen into months and months into years, and the years are swallowed up in centuries, this subtle power will go on, conquering and to conquer, till all shall hail it, and sing forth its praises.

An Undergraduate's Impressions of Dr. Kuyper.

Many of us come from Dutch homes where the old Puritan influence is strong, and from childhood have been reared in an atmosphere where the tenets of "Vader Braak en Calvijn" and the old Dutch Catechism were dedicated to the noble purpose of framing our young lives into something that could withstand the liberal tendency of the age, and could give a "reason for the hope that is within us."

We have seen, perhaps, on the shelves of the family library, such books as "Het Voto Dordraceno" and others of the same type, with their white and blue binding and ancient frontispiece, and sat by in silent awe when our parents took down their musty treasures and read and talked about them "Kerk Vaders."

When, then, Dr. Kuyper's visit was announced, we looked ahead with pleasure to the time when we could see the man who wrote those volumes with the mottled covers, and whose learning was the sole object of our parents' admiration. And rousing cheers the students received him in the chapel on October 28, while the eager look upon their faces betrayed the fact that something unusual was expected. After a few introductory remarks by the President, Dr. Kuyper began his address. Unfortunately for some, he spoke in the Dutch language, which however was an added charm to those who understood, for it is in his native tongue that Dr. Kuyper can become most eloquent. As he stood there in all his Napoleonic majesty and thundered forth his "Back to the old faith", we could not help but be borne along on the irresistible tide of his power. Americans as we are, he touched the chord of our hearts when he said in effect, "Gentlemen, divide not your sympathies between Holland and America; your country and that alone." What a pity that Dr. Kuyper is not of our fellow-citizen. His patriotism is truly American. Where could we not use such a statesman, theologian, journalist and thinker as he?

The American people at this stage of their growth need to be warned against the malum bene positum. It creeps in unawares, and it is just at this crucial period that we need such men as Dr. Kuyper to remove the corrupt leaven and make the lump again sweet and wholesome. As he leaves us and returns to his own country, his liberal view of America and Americans is surely widened, and we, too, will think more of him, and will continue to regard him as the champion of our childhood faith, who came to us and said, "Koop de waarheid en verkoopt haar niet."
Y. M. C. A.

The V. M. C. A. has had very interesting and instructive meetings during the last month. Excellent addresses were delivered Thursday evenings, which certainly did not fail to leave a blessed influence on the students of Hope College.

Rev. de Bey delivered an address on "Hindrances", Oct. 28. The following week the regular meeting was postponed because most of the students desired to hear Dr. Knuyper of the Netherlands, who was then in the city. Nov. 3, the Rev. de Jong addressed the students on "Elijah", while Rev. Van den Berg's topic on Nov. 10 was "The Atonement." Dr. Fulton spoke on "Character" Nov. 17, at which meeting nearly all the students and many friends from the city were present, filling every seat in the hall.

The Week of Prayer was observed with great zeal, beginning with a meeting on Sunday evening, which was led by Prof. Ladd. During the rest of the week the meetings were held from 11:15 till 12:00 o'clock in the forenoon. The leaders were: Mr. N. Boer, Prof. Dimment, Dr. Beardsley, Prof. Bergen, and Mr. C. Spaan. The attendance was most encouraging. We feel that those hours of prayer have done us good, and only hope that the inspiration there received may be permanent.

De Alumnis.

EDITED BY HENDRIETT A. THOMAS, '06.

Rev. L. Dylestra, '75, has been compelled to give up his charge at Englewood, Illinois, on account of ill-health.

Dr. J. Otte, '83, writes that Hope Hospital at Anody, for which he collected while in this country, has been occupied for some time and is now already over-crowded. He says that almost all opposition to the hospital has ceased, even some of the greatest enemies have become friends, and some of the community have offered money for the work.

Rev. H. V. S Peake, '87, of the Japan Mission, was made happy by the coming of a daughter.

Mrs. A. Pieters, '97, in addition to her other mission duties, has started and is overseeing a laundry in Nagasaki, Japan. The object is to give employment to the students during the holidays.

College Jottings.

EDITED BY J. D. TAYLOR, '06, AND D. KORTELEIN, '07.

Reminders!

Strong broth......
Malum bene postum non movere.

How's the boy?

Richard De Jong, '01, has joined a secret society, judging from his frequent visits to a masonic lodge.

Keep cool, pa, you'll make the harbor alright.

Hope was well represented at Faust not long ago.

Shurtlewonder whether Faust remembers Newton's third law. Be on guard for a practical demonstration, Kelley.

Prof. Nykerk at the Age of Six.

From the acorn grows the oak.

John Meulpolder is preaching in the vicinity of Grand Rapids. "The devotional exercises will be conducted this morning by the Rev. Mr. Meulpolder."

"There'll be a time some day, When we are far away, There'll be an answering cry, There'll be a time..."

Prof. Boers hopes to return soon and put new life into the study of history.

Boom a looks, Boom a looks,
Nim boom bell,
We're the H. C. L. L. L.

By request of Mrs. Gilmore.

Keep straight, Sophs, somebody is smiling.

"Should auld acquaintance be forgot..." How about the buggy, custodian?

Not a great difference between Manners' and Nywening's bed. The one comes down every night. The other comes down once in a while.

The stand-pipe has become an eyesore to the A's.

C. A. Langworthy is at present teaching at Polo, Ill.

Students, brush your coats before going into the Greek room lest some stray long hair on your back attract attention.

Kalamazoo Cooper wants his slippers back.

A very pleasant reception was tendered to Dr. Kollen and the Hope alumni at New Brunswick by Dr. and Mrs. Gillespie not long ago.

Dr. Kollen's return from the east was hastened by the illness of his wife.

Prof. Ladd's Thanksgiving was saddened by the death of his father. Oh, well. The D's did not know the co-education rules.

Schipper recently received a fine organ.

Drowsy authorities—after Hallowe'en.

Mrs. Gilmore has returned from Minnesota, where she assisted the secretary, Mrs. Horton, in pleading the cause of missions.

Arends is suffering nervous prostration due to overwork, etc.

Read the circulars on the Lecture Course.
THE ANCHOR.

56

The next ANCHOR will contain the full text of Dr. Fulton's address on "Character." Isaac Fles, formerly '99, visited his old classmates recently. He is at present employed as stenographer for the Grand Rapids Chair Company.

Remember your number in chapel and don't crowd the ladies. Only a fatherly warning.

That cuspidor which the Juniors so heartlessly removed from the German room was not so enormously infinitesimal by a long shot. However, the present one is more cosmopolitan, irresistible, and absolutely novel, and almost a product of incomprehensible and unfathomable genius.

Nettinga is becoming famous through his essay on Macaulay.

M. Den Herder was under the weather a few days last week, much to the annoyance of Coach Peter.

Meengs is sporting a cane at New Brunswick. Will some one please take a snap shot?

A catechetical class meets every Monday from 5 to 6 in the Y. M. C. A. room, under the instruction of the Rev. Mr. Dubbink. The Westminster is studied.

Kleinbessellink expects E in English. He has hitherto been a faithful porter to the professor in charge.

Now in press—Criticism on Dr. Kupser's Dutch, by A. Klink. Webster has the following:

"Soup—Meat and vegetables boiled in water.

Kra. — Bruuk, Seligpeo, Massena, Warren, Brewerto.

Jennie at the goal. Mokee and Wiggers in the race.

"Those abominable class-meetings."

Davin's got a violin, but he doesn't want his folks to know it.

"I am well moulded alright enough."

—Prep. 27 to 6. Of course Jimmy is included under the first number. All come down and see Van der Laan's photos.

Leestma's heart is cheered each Friday by the sight of a horse and buggy et al.

At the banquet of the Boarding Club on Thanksgiving Van der Mel made an interesting response to the toast "Fishing and other sports."

Kuizenga and Broek have been chosen by the Seniors and Juniors respectively to represent them at the local oratorical contest. The faculty will also choose one from each class. The Sophomores have, as yet, not made a selection. The contest occurs Feb. 22.

The G. S. building which was gutted by fire a few weeks ago has not yet been repaired.

Seas in the Exchanges.

The new law in physics: The department of a pupil varies universally as the square of the distance from the teacher's desk.

While studying French—"Vous avez raison", you have raisins. I suppose that is like our expression, "You're full of prunes."

England has no college papers and France no college papers, glee clubs rr fraternities. In the United States there are upwards of four hundred college papers, including eleven dailies, and as many glee clubs, and fraternities galore.

"Of course," said one old farmer to the other, "your boy is learning Latin and Greek, but is he getting anything practical?"

"Oh, yes; in the last letter he writ, he tells me he is taking lessons in fencing."

"Oh, parson, I wish I could carry my gold with me," said a dying man to his pastor. "It might melt," was the consoling answer.

Shipwreck:—Steamer "Mary Powell" sunk, all hands lost except cook. She was loaded with pig iron and insured for $50,000.

Say, Grandma, why did they put "Peace to his ashes" on Grandpa's tombstone? I always thought he was a good man.

Last words of authors—

"I am dying of a hundred good symptoms."—Pope.

"Don't let that awkward squad fight over my grave."—Keats.

BOOKS

STATIONERY

FANCY GOODS

SODA

M. Kieklintveld, 28 E. 8th St.

THE ANCHOR.

57

I feel the daisies growing over me. Scott.

"See with what peace a Christian can die."—Addison.

Have you heard about that woman who is now behind the bars? Her crime was cruelty to animals.

For she put outpaw in jaws.

A gentle old chief of police,

For a joke once arrested his niece,

For patching his pants

With a quilt of her own's,

Which he said made them

"Brothers of grace."

Prof. in history:—What made the tower of Pisa lean?

Student:—Famine in the land.

For subjects for orations, see our exchanges.

STUDENT'S DIRECTORY.

CENTRAL DRUG STORE. Drugs, Chemicals, Per Items, Toilet Articles, etc. H. Klemmer, M. D., Proprietor.

LITOHAN H. Boots and Shoe Maker and Repairer Cheap. Good work guaranteed. First Ward.

NOTICES.

Subscription, postage prepaid. H.30 a year. Subscriptions may begin at any time, and are payable in ad- vance. Single copies, ten cents.

The Anchor will be sent to subscribers until arrear- ages are paid and discontinuance requested. If this portion of the paper is marked, your subscription is either in arrears, or you are not on the mailing list.

Any subscriber who fails to receive the paper at the proper time will confer a favor by informing the sub- script-ion manager immediately. Address all communi- cations to the Anchor, Hope College, Holland, Mich.

The name of the author must accompany all communi- cations.

For advertising rates apply to Advertising Manager.
"WARMBACK" Overcoats and Ulsters

A new idea, found only in coats made by Hart, Schaffner & Marx. Double thickness of material extending entirely about the inside upper portion of the garment, keeping the back and shoulders warm, protecting the lungs and vital organs. Endorsed by prominent physicians. Look for the name "WARMBACK" and this label:

SOLD ONLY IN HOLLAND BY

WM. BRUSSE & COMPANY.

Clothiers and Tailors.

First State Bank.

WITH SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

Capital  -  $50,000.00
Cor. 5th St. and Central Ave.

L. Capron, President.
G. W. Nokma, Cashier.

Best Matt Finish Photos
$2.00 per Doz

Our motto is to please. We shall turn out nothing but the very finest work.

AM Specially FITTED FOR CLASS
AND ALL KINDS OF GROUP WORK.

PORTTRAITS, FRAMES, PICTURES,
EASELS, MIRRORS, ETC.

Holland City Portrait Company.
M. Tromp, Iris and Manager.
It's a Narrow View

Which leads one to neglect the eyes. If they burn or ache, come and see if we cannot relieve them by properly fitted glasses. No charge for examination.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.
W. R. Stevenson, GRADUATE OPTICIAN.
Office over G. A. Stevenson's Jewelry Store.
No. 23 E. Eighth street.

FIRST-CLASS WORK DONE AT HOLLAND CITY
Steam Laundry

O. J. EAST.

Students give him a trial.

BOYS OF HOPE CALL FOR
G. Blom's Express
Holland Telephone No. 31
DR. KREMER'S DRUG STORE.

If you want neat, smooth work done call on Arthur Baumgartel
BARBER
Shop No. 232 River Street.

What about the ... Ivers & Pond Piano

That is attracting so much favorable comment! What about it? There's everything about it that a good piano ought to have. There's not a single honest claim made for any piano that Ivers & Pond does not possess. It combines the best features of the best pianos with special patented improvements of its own. That's why it is the nearest approach to the perfect piano yet made. Easy payments.

H. MEYER & SON, River St., Holland, Mich.

Does it Concern You

If you want your Christmas and New Year's dinner to be a grand success order your

OYSTERS, JEL.

CHICKEN and OYSTER PATTIES, CAKES, PIES.

ICE CREAM or ICES.

In any form at the Boston Bakery. We have a full and complete stock of choice confectionery and fruit. Finest line of cigars in the city. Prices right.

The Boston Bakery

E. A. VAN DER VEE.

JOHN BOSMAN, MERCHANT TAILOR, Eighth St., Holland.

Dr. A. C. V. R. Gilmore, DENTIST.
All kinds of Plate, Crown and Bridge Work. Gold and Plastic Fillings.

Dover Vanpols Harmonic shop.

Eighth St., HOLLAND, MICH.

The Practical Watchmaker

H. Wykhuysen

Gold and Silver Watches.
Clocks and Jewelry.

AT BOTTOM PRICES.

G. A. Stevenson
The Holland Jeweler
Carries the largest and ... best assortment of Watches, Clocks, Silverware.

Spectacles, Etc.

IN THE CITY.

Eighth St., HOLLAND.

MULDER BROS.
All kinds of

Book and Job Printing

COMMENCEMENT PROGRAMS AND INVITATIONS.
COMMERCIAL PRINTING.

Chase Phone No. 50.
Bell Phone No. 68.

Turkeys Must Go

So long as there are Carving Sets to use on THANKSGIVING DAY.

Our CARVING SETS are the finest made. See them.

Kanters Bros.
Hope College, Holland, Michigan.

DEPARTMENTS:
GRAMMAR SCHOOL. COLLEGIATE AND THEOLOGICAL.

Studies in Grammar School and College:
Ancient and Modern Languages and Literatures; Logic, Rhetoric and Elocution; Mathematics; Physics and Astronomy; Chemistry and Geology; The Biological Sciences; Philosophy; Sacred Literature; Geography, History, Civil Government and Pedagogy; Drawing and Music.

COURSES:
Classical, Philosophical, Scientific and Normal.

Theological Department:
The Western Theological Seminary has a course of study as full and practical as its sister seminaries in the West.

Corps of Experienced Instructors.

Location:

Expenses Moderate. For further information, or catalogue apply to

PROF. G. J. KOLLEN, LL.D., Pres.
PROF. C. DOESBURG, Sec'y.

A COMPLETE LINE OF

Fall Goods!

Suits, Underwear, Shoes at

Lokker, Rutgers

PROPRIETOR OF THE

CITY MEAT MARKET

Has the choicest Meats in the city.

Everything First-Class!

Best Accommodation to Boarding Clubs.