Student body elects Congress representatives

by Heather Mummy

production editor

Students showed up in large numbers to vote for Student Congress representatives Friday, September 18 with the convenience of two new voting locations. Although there wasn't a large number of candidates, the voter turnout was strong. Approximately 950 voters cast their ballots. This is a much better turnout than in the last two elections, but not as good as the turnout four years ago when an unprecedented 1000 students voted. The turnout was much better than expected and a lot better than in previous years, said Holly Moore ('93), Student Congress President.

According to Moore, about the small number of candidates, "You never know; this year, because of the Congress thing, the bunch, whether you had 20 people running in district or..."

Poll booths were located at the vice president of Phelps, as well as additional booths in the DeWitt Center and outside Vau Wylen Library, making a total of four booths. This made voting more convenient for voters and may explain the larger voter turnout.

"By having a poll at both the library and at DeWitt, we were able to get a lot of people who vote who aren't on meal plan and don't go to Phelps, as well as the off-campus students," Moore said.

The results of the elections are as follows: Arcadian/Cosmopolitan Halls - Dave Fielding ('94), Darbee Hall - Joel Plantinga ('96); Dykstra Hall - Kristen Douglas ('96), Koryn Foster ('96), and Kay Otto ('96); Groome Hall - Tara Pearson ('96); Kollet/the/Liztich Halls - Carrie Borchers ('95), Eric Foster ('96), Chris Heaton ('96), and Melissa Necker ('95); Phelps Hall - Greg Sharp ('93), Scott Hall - Mike Yanis ('93); Voorhees/Van Vleck Halls - Valerie Pacheco ('96); Cottage - Karen Alkens ('93), Amy Hoekstra ('94), Omar Postigo ('94), and Alisa Schaap ('93); Bledter/Brumler/Vennema Apartments - Kim Brenn ('94); Crowfield/Ogilv Columbania Apartments - Tim Johnston ('93); College East Apart- ments - Robin Wagner ('94), and Large Representatives - Kristen Anthony ('95) and Dan Kleinrhek ('95); Off-Campus Representatives - Todd Bloch ('94) and Danielle Phebus ('95). Five of these representatives have served on Stu- dent Congress at least once before in the past four years. As new Student Congress representa- tives, these students will have a number of responsibilities. They will be required to attend the weekly meetings to discuss Congress business.

Each individual will be placed on a board and committee within the campus community. This year, Student Congress would like to integrate their struc- ture into the new Complex Council by having at least one of the representa- tives present at their monthly meetings. "I'm confident that the student body has assembled a very compre- hensive and hard-working group of people to serve them," Moore said.

The current cabinet members have been working together for about a month, but are anxious to start business with a full staff of nine.

Student Congress will begin its weekly meetings this Thursday, September 24 at 9:00 p.m. All stu- dents are welcome to attend. The symposium was structured to foster dialogue between the Hope community and experts whose perspectives spread the spectrum of ideological perspectives. Evidence of contrast can be found during the Keynote Debate when nationally known conservative Michael Novak, a former U.S. Ambas- sador to the Holy See, battled it out with Howard Zinn, a noted left-wing constructionist representing the liberal side.

Shortly after Novak insists that America is freedom's last hope, Luis Rivera-Pagan, known to some as a "violent evangelist," will discuss his views on oppressive U.S. foreign policy.

In the same day, the first Catholic priest to adopt children, Father George Clements, will guide a focus on "Being Black on Columbus Day.

 Pulitzer prize winner Barbara Helfgot Hyett will present a perspec- tive informed by personal experi- ence. Hyett notably had to learn to navigate but actually sail the route on the expedition. Hyett has also translated his diaries in an effort to get into the mindset of Columbus and to more thoroughly understand what he and his men experienced during their voyage.

The efforts of the many faculty and staff who collaborated to bring such high caliber speakers to campus will surely bear fruit next Tuesday and Wednesday.

There will cer- tainly be disagree- ments on various issues presented. This symposium, however, will serve in purpose which is to foster an understanding that nei- ther individuals nor communities are isolated from the repercussions of the Columbus legacy. When Spain collided with the Americas, a process began. Critical analysis of that process in terms of our current world order is the mission of the Critical Issues Symposium this fall.

The event was designed to mobilize individuals and communities to then use their newfound knowledge for purposes previ- ously ignored.

Although Co- lumbus stated this process long ago, today's individu- als and communities decide whether or not it continues.
A wise choice?

H. Ross Perot made headlines again last week with the announcement that he would be once more throwing his hat into the presidential ring (sort of). Perot’s name will appear on ballots in all fifty states this November, however he is reportedly undecided as to whether or not he will actively campaign for the post. Regardless of his decision in this particular matter, the more addition of such a strong independent candidate to the electoral scene filled, competitive 95-year tradition of American presidential politics will take to the banks of the presidential trenches be like?

Whatever the correct reasons for Perot’s hasty exit, these three opinions shine unfavorable light into the Perot campaign. His departures force voters to question his commitment to the people of this country, and casts shadows of doubt across his own personal and business affairs.

Those voters who simply wish to see their own campaign don be expounded of the two parties now. Whispers of existence by voting for this gentleman should pause to consider the consequences of his entry into the highest office in the land.

The actions of this candidate so far have left us with more questions than answers, do we want a president who will do the same?

In a few days both Hope students and people from the community will gather to watch the annual Hope College Tradition— the Pull. To prove the appearance of the Pull site, Hope’s Environmental Issues Group spent the Saturday before the big cleaning up the area.

Environmental Issues group pull’s together

by Cindy Keip

The Pull, a gut wrenching, ten- second competition, will take to the banks of the Black River (near U.S. 31 and M-21). It begins at 4 p.m.

He Perot quit so suddenly, and that the two major party candidates did not become a billionaire by keeping his hands clean; rather he may have dabbled in white-collar crime somewhere along the way.

For this reason, participation in a political campaign placed him largely at risk. He could perhaps have been discovered as the other parties closely and carefully exposed negative aspects of his past, and thus he might not only have lost the race but also his business and freedom as a citizen. (This view, by the way, could explain his quick endorsement of the Democratic party after his withdrawal. Who was threatening to expose what?)

A third and more logical approach to the subject of Perot’s departure may be simply to look in his personal history. He has been known to express a desire for something until circumstances get a little rough along the way, at which time he would promptly lose interest.

The mudslinging and dirt-digging of the presidential campaign last summer may have simply been too much for the fly-by-night candidate; he lost interest and decided to remain a businessman. However, he has lately seen the poor responses of the American public to the two major political candidates and perhaps decided that he might have an easy time in these last few weeks after all. Somewhere, in registering this last possibility, voters must surely question the candidate’s ability to handle the hereafter, found in the White House. If the campaign was too much for Ross Perot, what could life in the presidential trenches be like?

Intramural action heats up by Jay Bromberck staff reporter

Many students seek exercise which is: fun, organized and moderately challenging. For them, walking to class and lugging 50 pounds of books along the way is simply not enough.

Intramural sports are for people like this. They provide a way to exercise with others through team competition. These organized team sports are open to all Hope students, faculty and staff. For a slight charge for bowling, these activities are free.

Six times during the year, 10 different sports are offered to men's, women's and coed teams. The team win can range from a low of two in coed badminton to a high of 10 in slow pitch softball. Additional players may be added to rosters, but teams may not exceed the maximum number of participants during play.

At this time, men's and women's singles tennis, women's three player volleyball, men's flag football and coed inter-sorority waterpolo are being played.

Teams are currently forming for coed flag football and bowling, women's six player volleyball and men's soccer. Play for these intramurals begins on Oct. 10 with the organizational meetings in Dow 201 on Oct. 5. In addition to the fun and exercise, there is an element of competition. Each team vies for two things: points and championship T-shirts. Points are awarded for participation with bonus points awarded for league standins and playoff games. T-shirts are won for each seasonal championship.

Two awards are given out at the end of the year. For the team with the most points there is the Outstanding Team Award and for the individual point leader there is the Outstanding Individual Award. These awards don't necessarily go out to the team or individual that wins the most. Because more points are given for participation, it is possible to win an award without winning a single championship.

“Year one we had the most outstanding men’s team that did not win any championship at all. But they had people that consistently were at every single game,” said Dr. Anne Irwin, Intramural Director. Forming a team is easy. Simply gather as many people as needed and fill out the appropriate paperwork. The forms are available at the Dow faculty offices. Then attend the organizational meeting to find out more information.

Students who are unable to form their own teams can either fill out the team paperwork and specify that they need a team, or attend the meeting and one will be formed. No one will be turned away.

Other sports available during the year are basketball, volleyball, softball, badminton and, new this year, ultimate frisbee.

For more information concerning intramural sports, guidelines concerning rules and procedures are available at the Dow faculty offices to the right of the pool, or call the Intramural Office at x7956.

Development director, Daniel Thompson, with the help of the Exhibit Committee, chose Circles of one representative of each food group. Unfortunately for vegetation, a representative group represented the group of the meat variety. Various soups and a large salad bar are also available, either to accompany dinner or to enjoy alone. Everything is prepped and stock with fresh fruits approximately, as I found in my brief visit. The waitress assigned to my table was very helpful and eager to please; she even took extra steps to find an answer for one of my questions. My experience proved the table service to be fast and congenial. I enjoyed a generous helping of battered whitefish with a side helping of corn. Tartar sauce was conveniently provided for me, eliminating my need for further service. The fish was cooked in such a manner to highlight the natural "tasty" flavor. The bread was also prepared very well, although the corn was slightly overcooked and had a bland taste. The prices were slightly high for the quality of food served, especially my—dinner cost approximately $6.50. It seemed to me that I could have obtained the same quality of food and service at a less expensive establishment. It was worthwhile, however, to date in an atmosphere of comfort and warmth, instead of the usual drive-through service. The Cobblestone Inn is located on the corner of 34th and Washington, and is open from 2:30 a.m. until 10:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, and from 5:30 a.m. until 9:30 p.m. on Saturday. It is closed on Sunday.

Premier October Definitely the movie magazine! Believe me, these writers know exactly how to write these articles begin, not end. Liz Taylor, Dustin Hoffman, Gerard Depardieu, and Robert Redford are only some of the actors covered. The Last of the Mohicans is one of the movies also featured this month, besides being among the 45 other movies reviewed in depth. There is a charming article about a movie that you thought was written, directed and produced by Michigan Premier Star! An article written by Kadan. Also, columnist Libby Gelman-Waxer is specific and assertive about the degrading lack of realism in portraying cultural issues in today’s movies. Susan Sarandon is always only for movie buffs, but for anyone who has the slightest interest in the realistic aspects of the movie industry.

Mondo 2000 Issue 7 A steadfast mag un-occident to whether or not it is a magazine or a technological resource. Interviewing the Red Hot Chili Peppers is original and its article on the Interactive Brain Wave Visual Analyzer (seeing your EEG signals in 3-D graphic) is amazing. Sure, the Peppers may be controversial only for movie buffs, but for anyone who has the slightest interest in the realistic aspects of the movie industry.

Movies unclouded Eric Wampler "An American has no sense of privacy. He does not know what it means. There is no such thing in the country."
—George Bernard Shaw
In the movie Frankie & Johnny, at the point Johnny urges Frankie to open her eyes to show her nakedness to him. For an anther, all she will allow him to do is stand, allowing an intimate moment with the sitting Johnny. But they weren’t alone. In their small apartment countless other Americans, in addition to themselves, are also sitting, staring at Frankie and Johnny. Of course, due to some contrivance (hopefully artistic) we don’t get to see Frankie nude. Her lowing robe obscures the expanse of her flesh to all but Johnny. Essentially, though, that’s all. Why should the whole world leer at two lovers engaging in a private moment? And despite the fact that these are merely actors, one could tell that a true love was being expressed within a genuine way. At that moment, it was as if I was peeping in through the window at something unseen. Maybe I know what should be private. I say “maybe” should be private, as I said before, these are merely actors and the breathing, living characters they create in my mind will never actually know to what great extent their privacy has been violated.

Dear mind, then, the characters Frankie and Johnny are being deprived of their dignity, they are, in my mind, being sacrified for my benefit. Could there possibly be anyone who doesn’t realize this ruthless peeping and eavesdropping? Perhaps. Is it in the interest of national health, it is for the same reasons that novelists and artists have for centuries been exploiting the privacy of fictional characters. (Yes, it is a new development. What is new is the visual panorama of the cinema, and with it the force of the intimate in actually seeing characters in the flesh.) Is it a chance to supplement our experience? Or could they be made more real, more human beings—more meaningful and full? Or does it ultimately amount to nothing more than the voyeur, hungry to gape at the intimacy of others because we don’t care enough for them to be too shallow or artificial? Ultimately, isn’t it a question of not wanting them to exist at all. Because Frankie and Johnny do exist. But they exist as part of me, and my privacy is sacred.

Tradition and progress at odds in Knick flick Daughters of the Dust, a film by Julie Dash, is an unnerving and moving tale through the blinding of different cultures. It takes place in the Sea Islands of the Gullah culture of South Carolina and Georgia. It is the turn of the century, and a Gullah Family is on the eve of its migration to the North.

Dash’s desire for change, for progress, is pulling the family, the Peanuts, from these islands steeped in tradition toward a new world. The family has decided to embrace American mainstream culture, leaving all Black community of the island, perhaps forever. But conflicts within the family exist. Nan, the 18-year-old daughter of the Peanuts family, struggles to maintain the ancient religious values and beliefs largely brought from the continent of Africa. And while it is traditionally the Gullah women who remember the culture’s history, another woman in the family, Haagar, wishes desperately to get away from the land remoteness, and the Gullah culture behind.

Many of the devices used in this film add an almost surreal aspect, certainly suggestive of a spiritual world. See, for example, the "naked" daughter of Titus. Several photographic techniques also lend an eerie feeling to the screen images.

Instead of a simple linear structure, the movie moves very similarly to a oral account. The soundtrack, too, is very suggestive
Hope, the ‘real world’

Periodically during the year, The Anchor receives letters to the editor that can’t be ignored. This week we have just such a letter from Donald Hoekstra, a former Hope College professor of religion who is currently an associate minister of Fountain Street Church in Grand Rapids.

Rev. Hoekstra has challenged my editorial judgment by saying The Anchor is not made decisions in line with “Christian principles and values.” (See letter below.)

I agree with Rev. Hoekstra that Christianity has bearing on the editorial decisions made, and how we live our everyday in response to suffering in the world, but I part company when it comes to how faith affects a newspaper’s service to a small community like Hope College.

A Stiff Charge

Rev. Hoekstra has responded with a stiff charge to an apparent inconsistency in the way The Anchor covers news.

According to his letter, we are holding a double standard by claiming to promote Christian principles and values. He says that we have not been very consistent: different events like orientation and pie-eating contests to the neglect of national and world tragedy while printing comments about Hope being the “real world,” we are encouraging a false image.

His letter seems to be based on a principle found in a classic story written by a Kansas pastor, Charles Sheldon. In his book In His Steps, he told how the church challenged his congregation not to do anything before first asking the question “What would Jesus do?” Rev. Hoekstra is saying that Jesus teaching would not allow the inconsistencies described above in The Anchor.

Christianity Journalism

Rev. Hoekstra is calling for congruity between what The Anchor prints and what Hope is and does. He says if Hope is not the “real world,” we should not claim that it is. He claims that Hope is not the real world is the foundation on which Rev. Hoekstra’s argument is based.

But Hope College is the real world for students and faculty who choose to be a part of its community. This makes a significant difference when addressing a community that has the potential role Hope College people would be disinterested from the situations they deal with on campus each day.

My primary concern in editing the paper is to serve my own community by promoting understanding among the leaders who live in the community. At best, Hope College people would be disinterested from the situations they deal with on campus each day.

The Anchor is a newspaper that serves its audience. The Anchor prints and what Hope is and does is important and worth thinking about. We need to make value judgments on each story idea we receive as to whether or not it has the news value worthy of print for our audience. This is responsible journalism for any audience.

It certainly is in line with Christian principles and values to run a responsible newspaper for a significant community and that is what we strive to do in The Anchor.

I want to thank Rev. Hoekstra for the letter critiquing The Anchor’s practices. It certainly caused me and other staff to think about what we do with the newspaper and its role at Hope College.

We welcome and appreciate future critical responses from this.
Biology and Chemistry united with new prof.

by Cynthia Keip

As biology and chemistry have grown together in recent years, Hope has hired its first professor to focus on biochemistry.

Dr. Maria Burnatowska-Hledin joined the faculty as the new associate professor of biology and chemistry. This position will bridge the two departments with molecular biology.

Before she came to Hope College, Hledin worked at Michigan State University as an assistant professor of physiology.

With a master's in molecular biology, she studied cellular functions at the molecular level and taught physiology, usually to graduate students.

Hledin is involved in research and received the National Institute of Health Grant, a five year grant program.

For the past few years Hledin has been studying the regulation of body functions by different hormones. She has shown that a specific hormone only affects specific cells of the kidney.

Hledin came to Hope College so that she could be more involved in the teaching aspect. "Most of the time I did research at Michigan State, maybe ten percent teaching, and I wanted to be involved in more teaching," she said.

Starting spring semester, Hledin will be teaching as well as researching. In addition to teaching freshman laboratories, she will be teaching cell biology and biochemistry during alternative semesters.

Upon arriving at Hope College, Hledin was surprised at how well the students were treated here. "I come from a big place where the undergraduate students are basically on their own," Hledin said. "I think they miss a lot of opportunities that students at a smaller school like this have."

Compared with Michigan State, Hledin said that students at Hope receive more direction and have more contact with professors.

Hledin studied biochemistry at McGill University in Montreal, Canada, and decided to go into teaching because she had always liked working with students and being involved in the sciences.

The always popular a cappella group, ACME Vocals performed in the Kietz Saturday, September 19 an overflowing and enthusiastic crowd.

The group, made up of talented vocalists Steve Anders, Tom Ciappa, Kevin Pose, Beth Seline and Faadl Shukry, performed a wide variety of songs without the aid of musical accompaniment. The group used their voices as instruments, imitating the sound of horns, drums and even wailing guitars.

ACME Vocals immediately got the crowd going by making fun of Hope College. This followed with various cuts on the make-up of the audience and occasional water attacks with a Super Soaker.

However, the audience would not be put down. Numerous hecklers joined in the act, making for a fun-filled evening.

All jokes aside, this group can sing. They won first place in a national a cappella competition last May.

"Obviously, their winning first in a national a cappella competition means they're really good, and they're by far the best a cappella group I've ever heard," said Brian Watkins ('93), SAC Publicity Chair.

The crowd enjoyed lively renditions of "Revolution," "Stand By Me," "Is She Really Going Out With Him?" and numerous other classic favorites.

The crowd responded positively with cheers and clapping, as well as groans for unnecessarily bad jokes.

As audience member Anissa Watkins ('94) said, "The jokes were dumb, but the music was good."

The group has performed here twice before, the last time being May Day of 1991. "They really enjoy singing here, but I don't know if they'll be back," Watkins said. "They're gaining popularity and might not be doing college dates starting in 1993."

Volunteer Services adds new projects

by Greg Brown
campaign editor

Two major service projects have been added to Hope's Center for Volunteer Services since the beginning of this semester.

Plants include a Volunteer Fair, booking 23 service organizations, and a service project with West Ottawa High School. The Center for Volunteer Services can be found on the second floor of the DeWitt Center near the Business Office.

The Volunteer Fair will get things going for the Center on September 24 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Mass Auditory.

"The service organizations at the fair will provide information so students can get a feel for what the organization is about, and how the volunteer can fit in," said Leah Schnaars ('92), director of the Center for Volunteer Services.

Other than making connections between organizations and volunteers, the fair will serve to reorient the consciousness of students as to what the needs of the community are.

The second project currently in the works is the result of a new requirement at West Ottawa High School for students to complete 20 hours of community service in order to graduate.

This program is an attempt by West Ottawa to incorporate community service into the educational curriculum.

"We are going to be helping West Ottawa place student interns to work as volunteers to work in coordination with students, faculty and staff," Schnaars said.

Three Hope interns, chosen by the Center for Volunteer Services, will be developing and implementing a community service program and working as monitors for the West Ottawa students.

The project also involves writing a grant proposal which is being done in coordination with a representative from West Ottawa.

The grant, if awarded, would allow this program to continue each year. The grant proposal to The Kellogg Foundation and to Campus Compact also includes provisions for project expansion.

"The overall goal is to incorporate community service into the learning process," Schnaars said. "Community service can enhance what you learn in the classroom and prepare you for citizenship.

Apart from these two events the Center has its busy business of routing civic-minded students to organizations who can use the help from students.

"We have connections with about 40 different volunteer and service agencies in the Holland area," Schnaars said. "We have connections with some national and international organizations as well."

According to Schnaars, these connections aren't the only things the Center receives. "I have also received a successful placement of a student volunteer."

"We do our best to facilitate communication between the student and the organization," she said, "but it operates mainly on student initiative."
Cell Groups come to Hope

Throughout the next three weeks we will be in the Chaplain's office to help you to sign up for a number of Hope students on Cell Groups. What’s a Cell Group? The term “cell group” has been used in many places and times, but the current buzz about campus is in reference to a small group of students who will meet weekly with a faculty person for spiritual growth and discussion. An all-new, six-week pilot program of faculty-led Christian Cell Groups will be underway this semester. These small groups will begin meeting after fall break, and conclude before Thanksgiving. Most will meet in a comfortable campus lounge setting; one or two in a faculty member's home.

The six-week Cell Group program will enable students and faculty to deepen their relationships with one another in a more relaxed setting than the classroom. (No attendance-taking, exams or grading allowed!) Faculty members will be leading the group discussions of contemporary issues relevant to students, and how the Christian faith impacts these issues. Some groups will do Bible study; others, week-by-week topical discussions and/or devotional readings and reflection.

We are hoping that students will want to take advantage of these opportunities. Simply by spending an hour or two a week, possibilities exist for students to make new friends, explore issues of faith together, and grow through an arm of Hope’s Christian community. Over twenty faculty members have expressed interest in leading a Cell group as well, so students may have the chance to get to know Hope faculty (and perhaps even find in the experience a future reference?).

Career Notes...

“Ready, Willing, and...Able?”

Welcome to the first column of Career Notes, a bimonthly cooperative effort by The Anchor and Career Planning and Placement intended to keep you informed of career-related information that will be helpful in the career planning process.

If you choose to obtain employment that you graduate from Hope College, congratulations! You have chosen a great place from which to gain knowledge and assist you in achieving your goals. Some of your education at Hope is not career-specific. You may look at this as a disadvantage. It is—if you allow it to become one. I challenge you to look at your liberal arts education as an advantage. There is significant versatility in your degree, because your skills are transferable.

A degree from Hope is a significant accomplishment. Since the competition for employment among degree-holders is becoming third, you need to take action. You cannot sit back on your summers come and go or wait for your future to find you. Put one step ahead of the "other person." "She" is in the world world that you are ready, willing, and able. How? Take concrete steps now to make yourself marketable.

Furthering your interests and perfecting your talents, develop the skills sought by employers. What follows are many suggestions on how to do so:

1. Continue building a solid academic background through core requirements, your major(s), or minor(s). Additionally, you may want to seek out specialized course work. Some examples include computer programming, computer graphics, public speaking, foreign languages, and leadership.

2. Internships are planned professional experiences that allow students to actively explore career interests. While contributing to the organization, you would be developing your various professional, skills. Most often these experiences are not paid, but can be taken for credit. Internships can offer you local opportunities or through established programs such as the Chicago Metropolitan Center, the National Association of Physicians, and the Philadelphia Center. See your department chairperson, advisor or appropriate program director for details.

3. Your part-time or summer job can also be instrumental in enhancing your marketability. Seek work opportunities that are in a field related to your interests.

4. Volunteer! Is the name of a book that says it all. Volunteering can expose you to many situations you may not have access to if you choose another occupation. As a Big Sister through Higher Horizons, you can enhance your marketability in any occupation that would require interaction with children. Working on a fund drive for United Way can expose you to: 0.

5. As a student at Hope College, you have access to some phenomenal overseas study opportunities. In these times of growing cultural awareness and international changes, studying abroad can offer you an opportunity to take your education and apply and develop in another cultural context. This opportunity also allows you to expand your knowledge about another culture.

6. Closer to home (or maybe not!), reason in your career search can strengthen your learning in a particular area. This is helpful whether you are considering for graduate school.

7. You thought getting involved in SAC, Student Congress or the fraternity was only for the fun. Through various campus activities, you are actively developing your skills in leadership, creative planning, organization, problem solving and teamwork.

Seek these experiences now. Take responsibility for your future by implementing some of these techniques. If you have questions or need assistance with any of these areas, come and talk to Dave Austin in Career Planning and Placement, located in the Sligh Building next to the DePeart Art Center.
