Professors honored for publication

Jenny Cencer

Several professors from Hope College have recently continued the tradition of publishing books by receiving contracts honoring works of their own. Professors Carol Simon, professor of Philosophy, Miguel de la Torre, professor of Religion; John Cox, professor of English; James Herrick, professor of Communications; Phil Munoz, professor of Religion; Neal Sobania, professor of History; and Julie Kipp, professor of English, have all received publishing deals of late.

All the published professors were recently honored at a reception held in Lubbers Hall, congratulating them on their success.

To name one, Carol Simon’s piece was written throughout the course of two years, in collaboration with professors from several other colleges. Entitled “Mentoring for Mission,” this book is intended to help faculty at Christian colleges reflect on the effect of Christianity on a college, Simon said.

In contrast, Neal Sobania created a novel which described a simplified overview covering the history and culture rooted in Kenya. Sobania describes his published work, “Culture and Customs of Kenya,” as being great fun to write and is proud to announce that Kenyan newspapers have received it well through complimentary reviews.

All the published works of the faculty are available at this time for purchase at Amazon.com.
Consequences of sex

In 2001 there were 816,149 people living with AIDS in the United States. In 2000, there were 31,575 people in the US with Syphilis, 702,093 with Chlamydia, and 358,995 with Gonorrhea. These four sexually transmitted diseases are the most common, but there are around 20 that rank in the most-likely-to-get category, including genital herpes, which can cause birth defects in babies, human papilloma virus, which is linked to cervical cancer in women and pelvic inflammatory disease, which is caused by various other sexually transmitted infections and can lead to infertility in women.

Marie Hemphel ('06) was right when she wrote a letter to the editor basically telling the Anchor we left out information about sex when we did the series on sex. We did in the fact that we overlooked a lot of the consequences of sex. And there are consequences. Irresponsible sex is almost like holding a gun to your head and not knowing whether it is loaded or not. Would you really want to pull the trigger?

One of the main consequences of irresponsible sex is sexually transmitted diseases and infections. In the world today, AIDS has reached a pandemic level. Not to sound like a sex-education teacher in high school, but AIDS is deadly. Yes, there are new treatments that prevent HIV from becoming full blown AIDS, but once AIDS has killed enough of your immune system, it has your life. It may take around ten years once HIV becomes AIDS, but you will be dead. On top of AIDS, there is the human papilloma virus, which can cause cervical cancer, which if left untreated, will have the same final result as AIDS.

Syphilis can cause insanity, chlamydia can cause infertility in women, and gonorrhea can cause blindness in babies and is one of the contributing causes of pelvic inflammatory disease. These diseases are nasty - uncomfortable and annoying at best and fatal, at worst. To me, none of these diseases sound like a whole lot of fun. I'm not naive. I may be waiting to have sex, but I know there are college students who don't. I didn't write all this stuff to be like, "Oh don't have sex...blah, blah." Rather, I wrote it to inform you. STDs are only the beginning of the consequences sex can have. The best way to prevent oneself is to be informed. The best prevention of STDs is obviously not having sex, but if you are going to have sex, including oral sex, do it responsibly. Use a condom, take some form of birth control, know who you are sleeping with, and know their sexual history. If you are having unprotected sex, including again oral sex, get tested for STDs. You can be tested for STDs at the Health Clinic, and it is confidential.

Don't become another person of the over one million people in the United States who live with a sexually transmitted disease or infection, and most definitely, don't make your partner become another person out of those one million.

All statistics can be found at nhlivcalc.gov.

Let's Talk About... Politics
Part 1: Conservative viewpoint at Hope

Bush is doing an excellent job of doing what he promised to the voters.

-Jack Holmes, Professor of Political Science

Editor's note: This two-part treatment of politics at Hope will focus on liberal viewpoints next week.

Katie Taylor
Senior Staff Reporter

With so many things going on inside the boundaries of Hope College, it's easy for students to lose touch with important things going on in our communities and country. Last year's war in Iraq caused many more students to become aware of our government's current events.

Americans everywhere (and Hope was no exception) formed their own opinions on how President Bush was handling our country's situation. This is one of the factors that will affect, either positively or negatively, the outcome of the upcoming presidential election of 2004.

In turn, the outcome of the election will affect each and every one of us Americans. For that reason, it is important for Hope students to care about political issues (after all, college students are old enough to vote). The Hope Republicans and Hope Democrats are two groups of students on campus that are active in their interests of politics. As the presidential campaign approaches, both groups will be getting busier and busier. And voters, who include registered Hope students, will be preparing to help choose a president.

The goal of this article and its follow-up next week is to familiarize students with the two major political parties and their activities on campus. This week will focus on the conservative, Republican side. In West Michigan, Republican candidates are in the majority, and because the Republicans are in power in the White House and in Congress, their party is in the driver's seat these days. One of the main goals of the Hope Republicans is to spread their belief that President Bush is doing a good job and should be re-elected so that he may continue this trend during the next four years.

Why do Republicans say the president doing such a good job? Jack Holmes, professor of political science, is described on Hope's website as "the department's most ardent Republican." He feels that the president has been doing his job effectively, and he communicated this during a debate that took place on campus Oct. 15.

"My personal opinion is that George W. Bush is doing an excellent job of doing what he promised to the voters, and I communicated this to him personally several months ago," Holmes expressed.

Holmes supports what the President has done regarding terrorism and believes that Vice President Cheney, National Security Advisor Rice, Secretary of State Powell and Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld "are an excellent team of advisors for President Bush." The new Department of Homeland Security, created by Bush, has resulted in the largest government reorganization in decades. Holmes pointed out that the third year of a first-term presidency is usually the most challenging but feels that Bush has handled it well.

"The president has restored confidence in the office of president, responded to the challenges of Sept. 11 in an effective manner, worked hard to promote prosperity, and addressed the concern of citizens," Holmes explained further.

There are important issues other than the war that Hope Republicans have been discussing and taking stances on lately. The first is education. According to Holmes, when it comes to state education policy, Republicans support the reforms begun by former Michigan Governor John Engler. They also applaud the Republican state legislature for restoring cuts proposed by Governor Jennifer Granholm (which would affect private colleges like Hope).

As Granholm is a Democrat, it is not surprising that Republicans like Holmes disagree with her influence, which caused the withdrawal of a $200 million grant to build charter schools in Detroit. Republicans also strongly support Bush's plan to "leave no child behind." His goal, in short, is to close the achievement gap between rich and poor students. Also being discussed among Hope Republicans is the possibility of the Democratic Party running for president in 2004. If Bush is elected, there will be a major political party in the United States that does not support the president.

Amy Zwart ('04), Eric Ringnalda ('03), Josh Hauser ('04), Jeremy Brieve ('04), and Brian Manning ('03) pose with Ben Stein in the spring of 2002 when Hope Democrats brought him to Hope.

Jeremy Brieve, who is co-chair of the Hope Republicans, also is extremely satisfied with President Bush's performance these past few years. Brieve even had the opportunity to meet President Bush this summer in Dearborn. He is especially enthusiastic about Bush's focus on family values and commitment to those who demonstrate initiative and work ethic.

"We (Republicans) will continue to demonstrate how conservative policies support the traditional family structure that is fundamental to children's well-being," Brieve said.

It is obvious that Republicans strongly support President Bush for the work that he has done regarding issues such as education and the economy.

However, his handling of the war in Iraq is a much more controversial issue, and it is easy to find people who completely disagreed with American troops interfering there. Though Iraq is an ongoing situation, Holmes said he is confident that what Bush is doing regarding Iraq is being done to improve national security.

"It is up to the voters to evaluate his performance, and I am confident of the outcome," he said.

Brieve added, "The public will remember the compassion President Bush showed to the Iraqi people."

Cleo Parker Robinson Dance steps forward

Cleo Parker Robinson Dance, a world-class dance troupe, will perform at the Kravis Center for the Performing Arts at 8 p.m. Thursday and Friday as part of Hope College’s Great Performance Series.

Cleo Parker Robinson Dance has traversed the globe for 20 years performing dance experiences stemming from African-American traditions and is well known for their energetic, robust version of modern dance in the United States. According to Derek Emerson, Hope arts coordinator, students and community members should expect a unique and memorable performance.

"Students will see some of the top dancers in the country doing three pieces," Emerson said. "In addition to great dancing and choreography, they will see some outstanding costuming, and hear stories from cultures different than what most of our students have grown up with. In other words, (this will be) an exciting performance which is educational as well!"

Cleo Parker Robinson Dance is also known for its involvement in the community. It hosts an Annual International Summer Dance Institute that provides instruction in a variety of dance styles and traditions for adults and children. The institute features some sessions taught by visiting choreographers and dancers. The company will continue this tradition at Hope by leading three master classes for dance students and visiting performers.

"The commitment is not only in bringing in great performers to watch and listen to, but the commitment is also to allow students to work with the performers," Emerson said. "Tickets may be purchased at the Dewitt Center box office, which is located in the theatre lobby. The cost is $14 for adults, $12 for senior citizens, and $5 for students."

There is nothing to fear but fear itself

This Monday, I attended a student teaching conference. The presenter at the first seminar I attended began the session by reading a list of “great truths learned by children,” followed by a list of the same from adults. One of the items in the latter list really caught my attention. “If you can remain calm, you don’t panic the norm?”

Really caught my attention. “If you can remain calm, you don’t panic the norm?”

This is the statement that brought a plethora of questions to my mind.

Everywhere I look in the world, I see evidence of the disappearance of calmness and the panic and fear that now has a stranglehold on many. We are constantly bombarded by the disappearance of calmness and the panic and fear that now has a stranglehold on many. We are constantly bombarded by the news media. The possibility of nuclear weapons in Iraq! North Korea is attacking! You are too fat! You don’t look good enough! More on the news at 11!

Our culture is one of extreme fear. We are encouraged to be distrustful and cautious around everything. That’s the only way to make our time at Hope meaningful. Students comment on pornography at Hope

The possibility of nuclear weapons in Iraq! North Korea is attacking! You are too fat! You don’t look good enough! More on the news at 11!

Our culture is one of extreme fear. We are encouraged to live with a dread of both the known and the unknown. There are cautions everywhere to be distrustful and cautious around everyone. While the old adage, “better safe than sorry” can apply to many situations, we are unwilling to take risks. Without taking risks, humans are unable to learn, especially from one another. This type of risk taking is critical to forming a community where its members are comfortable enough with each other to learn.

Obviously, it would be too much to expect the entire world to make this shift in any short amount of time, but I think Hope is a whole other matter. To fulfill the goal of a liberal arts college, we must risk, and not live in fear. Instead of running away from things or ideas that scare you, confront them. Sit down and have meaningful, active discussions with those people you disagree with. That’s the only way to make our time at Hope meaningful.

OPINION

Students comment on pornography at Hope

To the Editor:

Upon opening the Oct. 8 issue of the Anchor, my roommate and I found ourselves shocked at the number of negative Letters to the Editor. In that issue’s “Voice,” Nick Denis pointed out that “only negative letters are being sent in,” and he encouraged readers “to voice agreements and praises.” We couldn’t agree more. Several letters attacked the recent article on pornography, an article that we believe was simply an attempt to address a very serious issue on this campus.

Thus, we would like to express our praise for the Oct. 1 issue of the Anchor, in particular its “Let’s Talk About Sex” article on pornography. Ever since my roommate’s computer died, we have had a difficult time finding good pornography. The Hope-Geneva Bookstore refuses to special order any magazine for us, and a 3 am. trip to the computer lab reveals that all the computers are already in use by other students who are downloading their own pornography. Imagine our excitement at opening our favorite college newspaper and finding a large collage of half-naked women in full color, stretching out over two pages! Several of our friends, who normally take no interest in the news at Hope, informed us that they very well may now become weekly subscribers to your fine publication. That is not to say that there is no room for improvement. We noticed that the women you included were only half-naked. Feel free to expand upon this. We also found several pictures of half-naked men, and we urge you not to include such illustrations in the future.

Overall, however, we applaud the Anchor for its attempts to solve the problems involving lack of pornography on campus. We were dismayed to find the Oct. 8 issue was void of such educational pictures, and we hope that future issues will bring back the Anchor centerfold.

Soccer teams keep ball rolling in MIAA race

Flying Dutch shutout Saint Mary's, Dutchmen rally to tie Hope

Andrew Borozan

The ball seems to keep bouncing the Dutch's way. After a dominating effort over Adrian last Wednesday (5-0) the Dutch traveled to Saint Mary's to take on the ever-dangerous Belles. The defense, led by the MIAA's player of the week, Rachel Sauereman ('07), proved to withstand any and every attack thrown at them by the Belles. Neegen Masshau's ('06) goal, with 12 minutes to play in regulation, was enough to win Saturday morning's contest 1-0.

"St. Mary's is a good team, so we had to come out intense and ready to play hard," said captain Dawn Gillian ('05) after the win.

The shutout victory over St. Mary's keeps the Dutch on top of the leader board in the MIAA with a 9-1-0 overall record.

"It was a huge win for us and secured our place in the MIAA even more," added Gillian.

The Dutch now hold the key to their own destiny standing five points above rival Calvin. The Dutch will defend their first place crown as Tri-State, Indiana comes to town on Saturday.

On the other side of the coin, the men kept their league championship goals alive with a 1-1 tie against Alma on Saturday. Alma deflated the high spirits of Hope's Homecoming early with a goal at the thirty-minute mark. The Dutchmen fought on however and tied the game with just 10 minutes to go.

"It was frustrating to tie a team after dominating most of the game," comments Kevney Dugan ('04), a captain on the squad. "We wanted to win it for the Alumni there as much as for ourselves, and I personally feel like we let them down."

The tie puts Hope in second place, just one point behind top-ranked Kalamazoo. The race for the conference crown may be hindered by injuries sustained Saturday, one by another captain Ed Huebner ('04), and another by midfielder Dave Gonthier ('06).

Both players were taken out of the game on Saturday with MCL injuries. The Dutchmen will miss Huebner's leading six assists as they take on Albion at home on Wednesday.

VICTORY from 1

it became clear that Hope had scored all the points they needed to get. Adrian never seemed to get it going, only getting 16 yards in the first quarter and never making it past the Hope 40-yard line in the entire half. Meanwhile, Hope took the ball with just under two minutes left in the half and drove 80 yards in just four plays thanks to a spectacular 44-yard touchdown strike from Butler to sure-handed Jake Schrock ('05). Although the extra point failed, Hope still went into the locker room at halftime with a 16-0 lead.

During halftime, in a move that was no doubt inspired by Brian Fleisher's ('05) proposal a month earlier, newly elected Homecoming King Kenny Rogers ('07) proposed to his girlfriend, a student from Ferris State University. Of course, the expected answer was given and the crowd, dizzled for the second time this season, again came to their feet for another successful proposal from the 50-yard line.

The second half looked much like the first half, with Hope again dominating all aspects of the game. Adrian's lone score was thanks to one big pass play on a drive that was otherwise sputtering. For Hope's offense, the second half was all about the running game due to Hope's big lead.

Brian Fielhauer's ('05) #88 takes a handoff from quarterback Phil Butler and attempts to run through Adrian's defensive line to pick up some yardage.

The Dutchmen lead the MIAA with a 3-0 record and with three more league games remaining in the season.

The Dutchmen will travel to Indianapolis this weekend to participate in the D3 Showcase Tournament this weekend, taking on Florida Atlantic on Friday evening.

Volleyball

The Flying Dutch fell to Calvin last Thursday in three games 32-30, 30-28 and 30-23. Despite the final scores, the match was closer than it looked on paper. Hope fought back every time Calvin tried to put the game away, consistently feeding Calvin a steady diet of spikes from Katie Hall ('04) and tip-overs from McKenna Troyan ('04). Julie VanderSlice ('06) continued to improve and hit the ball well throughout the match, overpowering Calvin's defense at times. While the comebacks were valiant, they were too frequent, which was part of the problem. Hope never got in a rhythm because they were constantly being forced to respond to 30-5, 5-1, or even 8-1 runs by the Knights.

The loss on Thursday, coupled with their loss the week before to Alma, drops the once MIAA leading Dutch back into third place two games behind Calvin and Alma. With only three conference games left, it appears Hope will be playing for second or third place.
