FATHER 80-MOTHER 76

The aged father and mother of a prominent Boston lawyer safely carried through the last two winters by

Vinol

The son says: "My father and mother owe their present strength and good health to Vinol. During the last two trying winters neither of them had a cold, and were able to walk farther and do more than for years. I think Vinol is perfectly wonderful. It certainly is the greatest blood-making, strengthening tonic for old people I ever heard of."

We want every feeble old person in this town to try Vinol. We will return their money without question if it does not accomplish all we claim for it.

Tarvia

Our editorial, "The Best Street," in last week's issue brought out comments and criticisms but as the News state it is not the intention of the writer to boost any one paving product but to get the best street at a reasonable cost, and one not constantly drawing upon the general fund for needed repairs, which all must pay. Alderman Van Tongeren especially took exception to the editorial, and asked the News to go to Muskegon where Tarvia is in use and give the results of our investigation. The News deemed this fair and Mr. Mulder put in a half day at Muskegon, not to make comparisons between any one street paving or another but to see what the Muskegon people thought of Tarvia, as requested by Alderman Van Tongeren. The News first called upon the Street Commissioner Mr. C. H. Potter, and his secretary Jay Mulder who were greatly pleased and loud in their praises of the Tarvia paving.

They said the street paved with Tarvia are dustless and noiseless. Market street is a street that bears the burdens of the heaviest trucking in the city and has been down now two and one half years. They stated further that the streets are easy to repair and the repaired places are not noticeable. The streets now laid in Tarvia are Miller ave., 1st street, Market street, Sumner St., Giddings Ave. and Paris Ave. This avenue is one mile long.

The next man the News approached was L. Maring of the Standard Oil Co., who lives on First street, who says that the street is noiseless and much better than brick, although the street had been laid only six months he could not tell as to the durability of it. He said that Market street was inclined to be soft in the hottest weather but that this had been remedied on First street by putting in a greater proportion of gravel. I paid $114 for 60 foot front, says Mr. Maring. The next man was a teamster by the name of Fred Babcock, who hauls heavy loads all over the city and knows every street in it. He also seems to regard Tarvia streets as highly satisfactory. Although he says the streets are softer than other streets especially in warm weather they seem to ride easier, like rubber for instance. He says that the asphalt pavements in Muskegon are being repaired by pouring Tarvia in the holes, and that in a few days you cannot see where the repairs were made and the Tarvia warms with the asphalt.

The next man the News man went to see was a representative of the Peoples laundry which is located on Market street off Western avenue, he seems to be much pleased with the street and says the heaviest trucking in the city was done over that street. He pointed out a truck load of motors from the Continental Motor Co. which he says weighed at least ten ton, all the Brewery wagon also travel this street, the Moon Desk Co., Motor Specialty, two liveries, Peoples Laundry and the Continental Motor Co., are all located on this street. The trucking, the man continued, for the store on the north side of Western Ave., the main thoroughfare of Muskegon is done on Market street as the rear of these stores are on that street.

Charles Witt, manager of the Great Western Oil Co., says I don't know much about Tarvia but they all say it is better than brick. He was asked why everyone in Muskegon detested brick, as you hear it on every side. He said that in the first place it is too noisy, and the street that had been down four years were practically reconstructed. This shows that they must have received a bum lot, and that all brick are not alike if they do look alike.

Our knowledge of street paving is limited but the News man looked over the above named St. and thought they looked good to him. He watched the trucking that was going on over these streets which goes to show at least that for two and one-half years the heaviest traveled street seems to stand up under it so far.

We do not know whether Westrumite is better than Tarvia or Tarvia better than Westrumite for the price, but we do know that this is an unbiased statement of men who handle and use these streets, interviewed at random as we met them on the street. It goes to show that a thorough investigation on this street problem before finally deciding is warranted.

"Prep." Exercises Monday

Very pretty invitations have been issued by the "A" class of the preparatory school of Hope college to the annual graduating exercises which will be held next Monday afternoon in Carnegie hall. There are 30 graduates this year, most of them being from Holland and this vicinity, and they have all been working hard on the class play and other features of the program, which will begin at 2 o'clock.

The graduates will march to the stage to the music of the college orchestra, and the invocation will be delivered by Rev. A. Oltmans. The class prophecy by Miss Muriel Fortuine, poem by R. Kroodsmas, and oration by Cornelius Muste will be delivered, and musical numbers will be furnished by Misses Oltman and Riksen, Willis Diekema and Clarence Lokker. Twenty-four members of the class will take part in the class play, which is a dramatization of Longfellow's "Evangeline."

Another event of great interest to the "prep" graduates is the annual public program of the Melphone society, which will be given Friday evening in Carnegie Hall. The society members, who are all in the "prep" department, have arranged a fine program for the evening.

The graduates of this year's class are as follows:

Jacob J. Althuis, George W. Bloemendal, Neal W. Blom, Ida E. Cappon, Gerrit Cotts, Fannie De Haan, Lora I. Denny, Willis A. Diekema, Cyrus J. Droppers, Muriel L. Fortuine, Julia Helnes, Catharine G. Half a Chance

But as the waters closed over him and he sank his hand, reaching blindly out to grip in imagination the foe, touched something round, like a serpent or an eel. His fingers closed about it. It proved to be a line. He drew himself along, and to his surprise found himself again on the surface and near a great fragment of wreckage. This he might have discovered earlier but for the anger and hatred that had blinded him to all save the realization of his inability to wreak vengeance. Now, though he managed to reach the edge of the swaying mass from which the line dangled, he was too weak to draw himself up on the floating timbers. But he did pass a loop beneath his arms, and thus sustained he waited for his strength to return. Finally, his mind in a daze, the convict clambered, after repeated efforts, upon the wreckage, fastened the line about him again, and, falling into a saucer-like hollow, he sank into unconsciousness.

The night wore on. He did not move. The sea began to subside. Still he lay as if dead. Dawn's rosy lips kissed away the black shadows, touched tenderly the waves' tops, and at length the man stirred. He tried to sit up, but at first could not. Finally he raised himself and looked about him.

No other sign of the vessel than that part of it which had served him so well could he see. This fragment seemed rent from the bow. Yes, there was the yellow wooden mermald bobbing to the waves, but not as of old. Poor castout trollop! Now the seas made sport of her who once had held her head so high!

The convict continued to gaze out over the ocean. Far away a dark fringe broke the sea line—a suggestion of foliage—an island or a mirage? Tantalizing, it lay like a shadow, elusive, unattainable as the "forgotten isles." The man staggered to his feet. His garments were torn. His hair hung over his brow. He shook his arms at the island—this phantom, this vain, empty vision. He regarded it now as some savage creature might a bone just out of its reach. From his lips vile words fell to be suddenly hushed. Between him and what he gazed at along the range of vision an object on one of the projecting timbers caught his eye. It was very small, but it gleamed like a spark sprung from the embers of the dawn.

"The dicky bird!" His dried lips tried to laugh. "Ef it ain't the dicky bird!" The bird looked at him. "Ef that doesn't beat!" But he could not think what it "beat." The bird cocked its head. "Ain't you afared o' me?" It gave a feeble chirp. "Well, I'm dashed!" said the man and after this mild expression of his feelings forgot to curse again.

Toward noon the man began to suffer more acutely from thirst, and, drawing out a sailor's ollakin pouch, one of the few possessions he had been allowed by the police to retain, he took from it a piece of tobacco, which he began to chew. At the same time he eyed the rest of the contents—half a ship's biscuit, some matches and a mariner's tumbler. The biscuit he broke and threw a few crumbs where the timbers were dry, near the bird. For a long time it looked at the tiny white morsels, but, finally conquering shyness, hopped from its perch and tentatively approached the banquet. Hours went by. The man chewed and the bird pecked.

That night it rained in real, tropical earnest, and he made a water vessel of his shoe, drank many times, ate a few mouthfuls of biscuit and then placed the filled receptacle where he had thrown the crumbs. As he did so he found himself wondering if the dawn would reveal his little feathered shipmate or whether it had been swept away by the violence of the rain. The early shafts of day showed him the bird on its perch. It had apparently found shelter from the heavy down-pour beneath some outjutting timber and seemed no worse for the experience. The man's second glance was in the direction of the island. What he saw brought a sudden exclamation to his lips. The land certainly seemed much nearer. Some current was sweeping them toward it slowly but irresistibly. The Frisco Pet swore joyfully. His eyes shone. "I may do him yet!" he muttered. The bird chirped. He looked at it. "Breakfast, eh?" he said and tossed a few more crumbs near the shoe.

The second day he brooded a great deal. The sharper pangs of hunger assailed him, and he grew desperately impatient, the distance to the island decreased so gradually.

Hardly knowing what he did, he drew forth the last little bit of the biscuit, ground it between his teeth and greedily swallowed it. The act seemed to sober him. He raised his big hand to his brow and looked at Dearie. Through the confusion of his thoughts he felt he had done some despicable thing.

"That weren't fair play, were it now?" he said, looking at the bird. "That ain't like a pal," he repeated. The bird remained silent. He fancied reproach in its beaklike eyes. They seemed to bore into him. "And you such a small chap, too!" he muttered. Then he turned his back on the island and with head resting on his elbow uttered no further complaint.

That second day on the raft seemed much longer than the first, the second night of infinitely greater duration than the preceding one, but dawn revealed the island very near—so near, indeed, the bird made up its mind to try to reach it. It looked at the man for a moment and then flew away. Long he watched it, a little dark spot, now that he could no longer see the ruby on its breast. At length it was lost to sight, swallowed up by the green blur.

The small winged creature gone, the man missed it. "Peared like 'twas glad to leave such a pal," he thought regretfully. The floating timbers became well nigh intolerable. He kept asking himself if he could swim to land; but, knowing his weakness from long fasting, he quibled his impatience. His eyes grew tired with staring at the longed for spot. He suffered the torments of Tantalus and finally could endure them no longer, so, making his clothes into a bundle, he tied them around his neck and slipped into the water.

Half an hour later found him prone and exhausted on the yellow sands. Nearby tall and stately trees nodded at him. Close at hand a great crab regarded him with reflective interest, hesitating between prudence and carnivorous desire. Glutinous inclination to sample the goods the gods had provided prevailed over caution. It moved quickly forward, when what it had considered only an unexpected and welcome piece de resistance abruptly got up. The tables were turned. That which came to dine was dined upon. A crushing blow demonstrated the law of the survival of the fittest. The weaker adorned the board. The man tore it to bits—ate it like the famished animal he was.

For a week nothing of moment interrupted the even tenor of his existence. He led the life of a savage and found it to his liking, pounced upon turtles and cooked them, kept his fire going because he had but few matches. One day a box was washed ashore, a message from the civilized centers to the field of primitive man! On its cover were the words, "Via Sailing Vessel Lord Nelson," followed by the address. The convict pried the boards apart and gave a shout. Rum, and plenty of it—bottle after bottle in an overcoat of straw, nestling lovingly one upon another! The man licked his lips, knocked off a neck, drank deep, and then, stopping many times, carried his treasure to his bowler.

Day after day turned its page, merged into the past; sometimes, perforce, he got up, and, not a pleasant thing to look at, staggered to the beach with his club. There he would slay some crawling thing from the sea, return with his prize to mingle eating with drinking until, sated with both, he would fall back unconscious among the flowers. But the prolonged indulgence began to have a marked effect on his store. Bottle after bottle was tossed off, the empty shells flung aside to the daisies. At length the day came when only two bottles remained in the case, one full pair, sole survivors of the lot. The man took them out, set them up and regarded them; a sense of impending disaster, of imminent tragedy, shivered through his dulled consciousness. He reached for the bottles and fondled them, started to knock the head from one and put it down. Resisting desire, he told himself he would have a look at the beach; the ocean had generously cast one box of well primed bottles at his feet; perhaps it would repeat its hospitable action and make him once more the recipient of its bounty. The thought buoyed him to the shore; the sea lapped the sand with Lydian whispers, and there, beyond the edge of the soft singing ripples, he saw something that made him rub his dazed eyes.

A box, a big box, a box as tall as he was! No paltry dozen or two this time! Perhaps there was whisky, too, and the bubbling stuff the long necked lords had sometimes pressed upon him in the past when he had "ousted" his man and put quids in their pockets or some of that fiery vin—something he had once indulged in with a Johnny Frenchman before he took to the tunnel, when he had been free to swagger through old Leicester square. Anyhow, he would soon find out, and, rushing through the water, he laid a proprietary hand on the box.

A long time he battered and battered in vain with his rocks; but, after an hour or so, he succeeded in splintering his way through the tough pine. In his befuddled, half crazed condition he had thought only of bottles. What he found proved a different sort of merchandise.

Maddened, he tossed and scattered the contents of the box on the beach. The ocean had deceived him, laughed at him, cheated him. He turned from the shore unsteadily, walked back to his camp and knocked the neck from one of the two remaining bottles. A few hours later, sodden, sottish, he lay without motion, face to the sky. And as he breathed thickly, one bleeding hand still holding the empty bottle, a bird from an overhanging branch looked down upon him—a tiny bird, little bigger than his thumb, that carried a bright, beautiful spot of red on its breast, cocked its head questioningly.

CHAPTER IV. THE WHEELS OF JUSTICE.

LONDON in the spring! Sunshine, the Thames gleam with silver ripples, singing as it flows; red sails! Joyous London that has emerged from fogs and basks beneath blue skies! On such a day about 10 o'clock in the morning three persons whose appearance distinguished them from the ordinary passersby turned into a narrow thoroughfare not far from the Strand.

"Quite worth while going to hear John Steele conduct for his client, I assure you, Lord Ronsdale," observed one, a tall, military looking man, who walked with a slight limp and carried a cane. "He's a new man, but he's making his mark. When he asked to be admitted to the English bar he surprised even his examiners. His summing up in the Dougherty murder case was, I heard his lordship remark, one of the most masterly efforts he ever listened to. Just tore the circumstantial evidence to pieces and freed his man! Besides his profession at the bar, he is an unusually gifted criminologist, takes a strong personal interest in the lowest riffraff, is writing a book, I understand—one of the kind that will throw a new light on the subject."

"Just what is a criminologist?" The speaker, a girl of about eighteen, turned as she lightly asked the question to glance over her shoulder toward several persons who followed them.

"One who seeks to apply to the criminal the methods of psychology, psychiatry and anthropology," he answered, with jesting impressiveness.

"When one is only a sort of country cousin," the girl waved a small, daintily gloved hand to the little group of friends who now approached and joined them. "Captain Forsythe is trying to persuade me it is a legitimate part of our slumming plan to take in murder trials, uncle," she said lightly, addressing the foremost of the newcomers, "just because it's a fad of his. Speaking of this acquaintance or friend of yours, Mr. Steele—you are something of a criminologist, too, are you not, Captain Forsythe?"

"Well, every man should have a hobby," returned that individual, "and, although I don't aspire to the long name you call me, I confess to a slight amateur interest."

"Slight!" she repeated. "Would you believe it, aunt—to a portly lady among those who had approached—'he never misses a murder trial! I believe he likes to watch the poor fellows fighting for their lives, to study their faces, their expressions when they're being sentenced perhaps to one of those horrible convict ships!'"

"Don't speak of them, my dear Jocelyn!" returned that worthy person, with a shudder. "When I think of the Lord Nelson and that awful night!"

"You were three days in an open boat before being sighted and picked up, I believe, Lady Wray?" observed Captain Forsythe.

"Every one behaved splendidly," interposed Sir Charles. "You," gazing contemplatively at the girl, "were but a child then, Jocelyn."

She did not answer. The beautiful face had abruptly changed. All eyes had gone from the clear blue eyes. "She is thinking of the convict who saved her," observed Sir Charles in an explanatory tone to Captain Forsythe.

carried his head high, as if from a habit of thought of looking up, not down, when he turned from the pages of the heavy tomes in his study. His face conveyed an impression of intelligence and intensity. His eyes, dark and deep, searched fully those they rested on.

He had reached a point in his cross examination where he had almost thoroughly discredited this witness for the prosecution when, turning toward a table to take up a paper, his glance, casually lifting, rested on the distinguished party in the rear of the room, or, rather, it rested on one of them. Against the dark background the girl's golden hair was well calculated to catch the eye, the great bunch of violets in her dress added insistent alluring bits of color in the dim spot where she sat. Erect as a lily stem, she looked oddly out of place in that large, sombre room. There, where the harsh requiem of bruised and broken lives unceasingly sounded, she seemed like some presence typical of spring, wafted thither by mistake. The man continued to regard her. Suddenly he started, and his eyes almost eagerly searched the lovely, proud face.

His back was turned to the judge, who stirred nervously, but waited a fraction of a second before he spoke.

"If the cross examination is finished," he began.

John Steele wheeled; his face changed; a smile of singular charm accompanied his answer.

"Your lordship will pardon me; the human mind has its aberrations. At the moment, by a curious psychological turn, a feature of another problem seized me. It was like playing two games of chess at once. Perhaps your honor has experienced the sensation."

His lordship beamed. "Quite so," he observed unctuously.

The business of the morning ran on, and John Steele at length concluded his cross examination. "I think, your lordship, the question of the reliability of this man as a witness in this or any other case—fully established."

"Any other case?" said his lordship. "We are not trying any other case."

"Witness may go," said his lordship brusquely.

Dandy Joe, a good deal damaged in the world's estimation, stepped down. His erstwhile well curled mustache of brick dust hue seemed to droop as he slunk out of the box. He appeared subdued, almost frightened, quite unlike the jaunty little cockney that had stepped so blithely forth to give his testimony.

The witnesses all heard, John Steele, for the defense, spoke briefly, but his words were well chosen, his sentences of classic purity. As the girl listened it seemed to her not strange that Captain Forsythe, as well as others perhaps, should be drawn hither on occasions when this man appeared. Straight, direct logic characterized the speech from beginning to end. Only once did a suggestion of sentiment—curt pity for that gin besotted thing, the prisoner—obtrude itself; then it passed so quickly his lordship forgot to intervene, and the effect remained, a flash, illuminating, Rembrandt-like.

Time slipped by. The judge looked at his watch, bethought him of a big silver dish filled with amber hued specialty of the Ship and Turtle and adjourned court. His address interrupted by the exigencies of the moment, John Steele began mechanically to gather up his books. He absently separated them again. At the same time Sir Charles and his party walked toward the bench. They were met by his lordship and cordially greeted.

"A privilege, Sir Charles, to meet one we have heard of so often in the antipodes."

"Thank you. His lordship, Judge Beeson, m'dear, whose decisions—"

"Allow me to congratulate you, sir!" The enthusiastic voice was that of Captain Forsythe, addressing John Steele. "Your cross examination was masterly. Had you been in a certain other case years ago when the evidence of that very person on the stand today in the main convicted a man of murder I fancy the result then would have been different."

John Steele seemed not to hear. His eyes were turned toward the beautiful girl. She was standing quite close to him now. He could detect the fragrance of the violets she wore, a fresh sweet smell so welcome in that close, musty atmosphere.

"My niece, your lordship, Miss Wray."

Steele saw her bow and heard her speak to that august court personage. Then as the latter, after further brief talk, hurried away—

"Sir Charles, let me present to you Mr. Steele," said Captain Forsythe.

"Lady Wray—"

"Happy to know you, sir," said the governor heartily.

"Miss Jocelyn Wray," added the military man, "who," with a laugh, "experienced some doubts about a visit of this kind being conducive to pleasure!"

John Steele took the small gloved hand she gave him. Her eyes were very bright.

"I enjoyed—I don't mean that—I am so glad I came," said the girl—"and heard you!" she added.

He thanked her in a low tone, looking at her hand as he dropped it. "You—you are making England your home?" His voice was singularly hesitating.

"Yes." She looked at him a little surprised. "At least for the present! But how"—she broke off. "I suppose, though, you could tell my accent. I've lived nearly all my life in Australia, and—"

Sir Charles, interrupting, reminded them of an appointment. The party turned. A slender figure inclined itself very slightly toward John Steele. A voice wished him good morning. The man stood with his hands on his books. It did not occur to him to accompany her to the door. Suddenly he looked over his shoulder. At the threshold she, too, had turned her head. An instant his glances met. The next she was gone.

DIRE DISTRESS

It is Near at Hand to Hundreds of Holland Readers

Don't neglect an aching back. Backache is the kidney's cry for help.

Neglect hurrying to their aid means that urinary troubles follow quickly.

Dire distress, diabetes, Bright's disease.

J. W. Flieman, wagon maker and painter, 83 River St., Holland, Mich., says: "I suffered for a long time from dull pains in the small of my back, often changing to sharp shooting twinges. I could hardly stoop or lift and if I sat down in a chair it was only with great difficulty that I was able to arise, as my muscles and joints were stiff and sore. I consulted physicians and they told me that I had lumbago, but their medicines did not help me. I finally decided to give Doan's Kidney Pills a trial and procured a box at H. R. Doesburg's drug store. After using them a short time, all my troubles disappeared and though this occurred over four years ago, I have not suffered from kidney complaint since. I have recommended Doan's Pills to a great many people and shall continue to do so."

The Most Important Point.

It is extremely natural that so much should have been said about the financial advantages that will accrue to Holland from the G. A. R. Encampment, that is now due within a few days. The majority of us live on the surface of things most of the time, and financial advantages are at least tangible and can be understood by everybody. Men can compute with a fair degree of accuracy how many dollars a given number of visitors are liable to spend in the city in a given time.

But there are other advantages accruing from the encampment that defy computation. After all, the stability of a republic, or, for that matter, of any government depends on the loyalty of its citizens, and any means that fosters loyalty is for that reason valuable. We have set aside the 30th day of May to install, if possible, into young and old new national loyalty and new enthusiasm for American ideals. But Memorial Day has to many a man become a matter-of-fact affair, since familiarity often breeds contempt. But the G. A. R. Encampment comes but once in a life time to a community and hence it is all the more full of meaning for the young America of this city. The spectacle of many thousands of old soldiers, wearing still the scars of service, ought to bring a rich harvest of patriotic sentiment in the school boys and school girls of Holland. We think the public school authorities showed rare good sense in arranging things in such a way that the school exercises will be over when the city's guests arrive so that the children can have the full benefit of it.

Perhaps it seems like sentimentalizing to make so much of the patriotism that the encampment will instill in Holland's children, but sentiment is just what we need. Last week in London Mr. Roosevelt wrote a letter to an English critic in which he expressed the belief that sentiment was absolutely indispensable to good government. As these boys and girls, who are the citizens of the future, glance through the daily newspapers they read of graft disclosures in San Francisco; they turn the page and learn about the rottenness of politics in Pittsburgh; in bold headlines in another column they are told of legislative corruption in Illinois. And so they go down the lists until to their untrained minds it seems as though all politics is merely a vast net-work of graft, and they lose perhaps some of the respect that is due to a great republic such as ours.

But an event like the coming encampment gives them the other side of the picture. For, after all, an old soldier stands for all that is most unselfish in American life. Even though sometimes the life of an old soldier may not be as lovable as it might be, the fact that at one time in his life he rose to the supreme height of sacrifice makes him a man apart. It is of inestimable value that the young people of this city can see these men honored with proper respect and it will tell in their future loyalty to the ideals on which this nation rests.

Therefore we need make no apology for calling it the most important point, when we take stock of the advantages that will accrue to this city from the convention. Holland is favored above the other cities of the state because of the present financial returns that the encampment will bring, but more than that because of the future returns it will yield in a truer citizenship.

It was also given out that the graduating class of Hope college had invited the Cornet Band to furnish music at the commencement exercises; to this Mr. Partington also objected on the ground that the instruments had never been duly "installed." Congressman Diekema's Tariff Speech in Congress.

Mr. Diekema. Mr. Chairman, with no uncertain sound, but with notes clear and strong, the Republican party from the days of Abraham Lincoln to those of William H. Taft has always and everywhere declared in favor of a protective tariff, so levied as to safeguard both American labor and capital against ruinous foreign competition.

The Democratic party on the contrary, has vacillated between free trade and a tariff for a revenue only, sometimes, as in 1892, declaring a protective tariff unconstitutional, a fraud, and robbery, and then again, as in 1872 saying—Recognizing that there are in our midst honest but irreconcilable differences of opinion with regard to the respective systems of protection and free trade, we remit the discussion of the subject to the people in their congressional districts. This platform of 1872, rather than that of 1908, seems to have governed the Democrats in Congress during the recent consideration of the Payne tariff bill, for they generally voted for protection on everything produced within their respective dis-

MEASURE OF PROTECTION
 In 1908 the Republican party declared for a revision of the tariff by special session of Congress, and at the same time declared what the measure of protection should be in this revision, namely, "the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries."

A very large majority of the American people, I believe, were entirely satisfied with this declaration. They wanted protection and they wanted the political party friendly to the doctrine to write the new law. The present controversy is not so much, as it formerly was, over the principles of protection involved in the tariff, but as to whether the measure of protection promised in the platform has been adopted and used by Congress in adjusting the new rates.

MEASURE DECLARED ADEQUATE

I submit that the measure of protection promised was a wise, just, and an adequate one. Under the competitive industrial conditions prevailing before these days of concentration, and consequent monopoly, it made very little difference how high the tariff walls were built about articles which we could produce, for exorbitant and unusual profits earned would very soon attract other capital, and resultant competition would reduce and regulate prices so as to fairly compensate capital using American labor.

What though the dikes were high, if behind them their dwelt a happy contented people, earning good wages and able to purchase at reasonable rates the necessities and comforts of life? The height of the walls only temporarily measured the producers' ability to charge. Then domestic competition stepped in, and this, together with the law of supply and demand, regulated the price. Industry after industry that could not have been founded in any other way was thus established. Without this protection we could not have become a manufacturing nation, for whenever a new industry was started the foreign manufacturer could well afford to temporarily dump his goods upon our markets at a price far below cost, in order to strangle the new enterprise, and then again to arbitrarily raise his prices and enjoy his monopoly of our trade. Many a patriotic American has been thus caught and separated from his money.

CHANGED CONDITIONS

During those days the measure of protection fixed by the Republican platform of 1908 was not necessary and probably would have been unwise. But conditions have changed. The map of the industrial world has been revolutionized. Copartnerships have given away to corporations, corporations to trusts, trusts to holding companies, and holding companies to international combinations representing unlimited amounts of concentrated capital. It is the duty of the statesman to realize this strange condition and the new duties which it imposes and to legislate with an up-to-date mind and heart.

If a domestic producer succeeds in monopolizing his product or succeeds in effecting a combination with substantiality all of the other producers, then domestic competition has been eliminated and he need fear only foreign competition. He can then fix the prices of his products just as high as the traffic will stand, just as high as the total cost of production abroad plus the tariff, freight rates, cost of handling, and necessary profits will amount to. Therefore under modern business conditions the height of the tariff walls has become of vital importance to the consumer, for it measures the limit to which concentration and monopoly can raise the prices and the wisdom of the measure of protection adopted in the Republican platform of 1908 becomes evident.

WAS PROMISE KEPT?

So much for the justice and wisdom of this new measure of tariff rates. Has it been faithfully and invariably used in the revision of 1909? This is the question which now agitates the minds of the American people.

No committee ever made a more conscientious and industrious effort to ascertain the difference of cost of production at home and abroad then did the Ways and Means committee of the present House. Listen to the language of the leader of the minority, the Hon. Champ Clark of Missouri, upon the subject. Said he, in his speech on the tariff bill:

I want to say a word about the Committee on Ways and Means. I say now that no 18 men, Democrats and Republicans both in the history of this country ever did harder, more tedious, more fatiguing, more honest work than the 18 members of the Ways and Means committee did in those hearings. Think of it! We began at half past 9 in the morning and worked until 1 o'clock, took an hour for lunch, then worked until 7 o'clock, taking an hour for dinner as we call it in the city and supper in the country, and worked until 11 and 12 o'clock at night; keyed up on edge tusseling with intellectual men who had facts in their possession about the tariff which they were determined not to give up, while we were determined that they should stand and deliver.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

What sources of information did the committee have upon which they based the new rates?

First, the testimony of our producers. This testimony was valuable, and most of the witnesses were, I trust, honest, but they were interested witnesses, and testified with a full realization of their deep personal interest in the outcome of the legislation.

Second, The testimony of the importers. Those probably also tried to be honest, but it is apparent to every one who has read their testimony, as most of us have, that they were witnesses looking at the facts through the colored glasses of their own personal interest.

Third, There were the reports of our consular agents abroad. Very valuable and of great help to the committee, but not the work of experts trained for and experienced in this particular line of work. This work was only an incident of their general duties.

Based upon this information and upon the help of government experts in the Treasury department, as well as upon the personal information and research of the able men of the committee, the schedules were drafted, and I say without any hesitation that the work was done honestly, efficiently, and as accurately as the sources of information above mentioned warranted.

I believe, however, that a board composed of skilled men, with no personal interest to deflect or influence their judgments and with adequate means and sufficient time at their command, could furnish the President and through him the Congress, with more accurate and reliable information. Certainly the people are entitled to the very best and most disinterested reports of the facts, and therefore I favor the appropriation of $250,000 recommended by the President, and indorsed by the Committee on Appropriations, to be used for this purpose.

WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE PAVED THE WAY

Why not make the appropriation? Did not the Ways and Means Committee, when it imposed upon the President the duty to administer the maximum and minimum clause of the Payne bill, provide that he could appoint men, or a tariff board, so called, to investigate into the facts and report to him as a basis for this action?

He had the consular reports; he had the experts in the Treasury department at his command; he had access to the printed volumes of testimony taken during the tariff hearings; he had all the sources of information that the committee had when the Payne bill, was framed. Why, then, provide for a board of experts to gather further testimony? So as to make sure that no injustice should be done to any nation. We want this board now, so as to make sure that no injustice shall be done to any citizen, and if injustice has been done, so that we may speedily undo the wrong.

OBJECTIONS URGED

I am sorry to be obliged to disagree with my colleague from Michigan (Mr. Fordney) whom I respect so highly, upon this question; but each is entitled to his own convictions, and through the clash of ideas, the truth will emerge clearer and stronger.

What, then, are the principal objections urged against this tariff board?

First. That the 485 members of both Houses are better able to judge of industrial conditions and the wants of the people than a tariff board.

Second. That the business world would be kept in constant fear and dread and in an unsettled condition.

Third. That the constitution of the United States provides that all laws for the raising of revenues for the Government must originate in the House of Representatives.

OBJECTIONS Answered

Let us examine these three objections separately.

First. That members of Congress are better able to judge of industrial conditions and the wants of the people than a tariff board.

This is perhaps true, as far as the principles of protection and free trade are concerned, but when the principles have once been settled, what those members then want is reliable and accurate information, facts impartially gathered, incontrovertible facts with which they can confront the producers and consumers of their districts, in order that equal justice may be done to all, and that none may be specially privileged. Is it not idle to say that the 485 Members, many of whom change every two years, are better able to gather this technical information than a board of skilled men assisted by special investigators and clerks?

Second. That the business world would be kept in constant fear and dread and in an unsettled condition.

It is true that nothing halts business and interferes with the course of prosperity so much as the threatened revision of the tariff, but this threatened revision will be the constant subject of agitation and the fruitfull source of discontent and business disturbance just as long as the people are not satisfied that they have received a square deal. The sunlight of publicity alone can clear the atmosphere.

No industry honestly conducted need fear this, and none other is entitled to serious consideration where the interests of the people are involved. Excessive protection is as unwise and unjust as free trade. No President would urge a general revision, and no Congress would undertake one (except in cases of change of political parties) unless the facts secured by the tariff board clearly showed that general rates of duties imposed were too high or too low. Again, the information secured by such a board would probably enable Congress in the future to correct individual inequalities and cases of injustice without the upheaval and disturbance always attending a general revision.

Third. That revenue bills must originate in the House of Representatives.

This is correct, but the farmers of the Constitution did not contemplate that all wisdom would be concentrated in the Members of the House as soon as elected, and that it would not be necessary for them to search diligently for the best and most reliable sources of information obtainable when framing revenue bills. Good intentions and honesty of purpose can not take the place of information, but when coupled with accurate information, industry, and the exercise of strong will power, they work out a nation's highest interests. There is no Representative so inefficient as the willfully ignorant one. How, then, can it be said that we violate either the letter or the spirit of the Constitution when we provide for a new and more adequate source of information.

PAYNE LAW

I do not mean to intimate that even if every schedule could be made faultlessly right all would be pleased. The voice of selfishness would still clamor long and loud and fill the air with noise, smoke, and confusion. No tariff will ever entirely satisfy everybody until some one can discover a way of protecting everything everyone produces and of admitting free everything everyone consumes. Every great act of legislation is the result of compromise. I believe, however, with President Taft that the Payne Act is nearer right than any of its predecessors, and is the best tariff act ever placed upon the statute books. "The best proof of the pudding is the eating thereof." We know a tree by its fruit, and not by its leaf and blossom. What, then, are the fruits of the Payne Act? Let me mention some of them.

FRUITS OF THE PAYNE LAW—REVENUE

It has produced the required revenue. From the ever increasing monthly Treasury deficits under the Dingley Act during the recent past, we have entered upon an era of an ever increasing monthly surplus. A surplus of more than $22,000,000, not taking into account the amount expended from the revenues on the Panama Canal, which under the settled policy of Congress must be taken care of by bonds, and not taking into account the corporation tax, which will amount to over $25,000,000, has already been accumulated under the Payne Act. We need over a billion of dollars annually to pay for the running expenses of this great country, and the first object of a tariff law is to produce the necessary revenue. The Payne Act has demonstrated that it is a revenue producer.

REVIVAL OF INDUSTRY

It has revived industry; tens of thousands of idle freight cars have been taken from the side tracks and put to work; hundreds of silent engines have been taken from the roundhouses and are now doing double duty; the mine and factory have felt a new impulse and are being operated overtime; increased wages, which will amount to tens of billions of dollars per annum, have been voluntarily allowed to labor; the army of the unemployed has disappeared, the hungry are fed, the naked clothed, and the homeless sheltered.

FOREIGN CONCESSIONS

Through the operation of the maximum and minimum clause, which the minority prophesied would en-gulf us in a general tariff war and would increase the average rate of duties on imports 25 per cent, we have secured fair treatment and special concessions from other nations, so that we have allowed the minimum rates to every commercial nation, and new markets have been opened for our products, thus stimulating industry and furnishing additional employment to labor.

LARGE IMPORTATIONS

For the first time since Washington signed the original tariff bill we are bringing in over 51 per cent of all imports without duty under the free list. This is, of course, the result of the new schedules which have so greatly enlarged the free list.

BALANCE OF TRADE

As a result of increasing the rates on luxuries and decreasing the same on necessities the balance of trade in our favor has been nearly cut in two; and while this is proof positive of a wise revision downward it is also a warning, for those heavy importations are displacing American labor, and this must not go to a point where labor will lack employment and the balance of trade will be against us, thus forcing our gold to go abroad.

HIGH-COST OF LIVING

But in spite of all this we are met with the constant assertion that the Payne Act is responsible for the high cost of living. It has been well said that the act may be responsible for the cost of high living, but not for the high cost of living, for the increases have been upon luxuries and the decreases upon necessities, and this is as it should be. Let women who want to wear the parisian modes pay for them. Let those who drink imported champagne and foreign wines pay for them. Let men who want to smoke a clear Havana pay for it. These people can afford it. It was wise to so readjust the rates as to make twenty times as much decrease as increase on necessities and to increase only for the purpose of equalizing the cost of labor at home and abroad.

There has been no denial of the statement recently made by Congressman Boutell, the able statesman from Illinois, that even a commission composed entirely of Democrats, after investigating the subject of high prices, would have to come to the unanimous conclusion that there is not in the Payne tariff law a single advance in rate above the Dingley rates that justifies an increase in the final retail price to the ultimate consumer of a single necessary article of food, of clothing, or of household use.

The high cost of living is a world condition. Strange as it may seem, the greatest advances since the passage of the Payne law have been upon articles on the free list or upon which the duties were decreased or upon which no advance was made over the Dingley rates.

SAMUEL GOMPERS TESTIFIES

I welcome the battle on this issue. The testimony from our American consular service, from the agents of the department of Commerce and Labor, as well as that of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, agrees with the statements of observing travelers abroad that the cost of living is no higher here than in Europe, and that wages in America are double the wages there. President Gompers, who certainly can not be accused of a desire to make the administration of President Taft popular, or of desiring to render aid and comfort to the Republican party, after having made a careful review of European labor conditions in his annual report and after having stated that meat is usually from 25 to 100 per cent higher there than in the United States, closes with the following words:

If the immigrants to this country are willing to continue living here at the same level he was obliged to accept in his native land, he can find it for the same money.

MINISTER LOUDON SPEAKS

Jonkheer J. Loudon, minister from the Netherlands to the United States, in an address delivered in Philadelphia on January 22, 1909, among other things, said:

We in Holland are free traders. Whilst I think if I were an American I should believe in protection for this country, I must say in Holland I certainly believe in free trade. It has done us good. It has kept our wages from being immoderately high and our peculiar industries have been able to prosper all the same.

This expresses the real situation, low wages and free trade with the cost of living as high as ours. Poor laboring people. The door of opportunity is closed to them. There is no star of hope in their sky. Thank God that the American standard of living is the highest in the world.

THE AMERICAN STANDARD

I feel safe in saying that the American laborer will never submit to live and rear his family under conditions similar to those existing in foreign countries. In America we live in better houses; we sleep in better beds; we eat more and better food; we wear warmer and better clothing; our children attend better schools, we enjoy more of the comforts of life than any other people in any country on the globe. This condition will continue as long as we protect our farming, business, and manufacturing interests and our laboring classes against foreign and pauper labor.

Our cause is so just, the logic and history of our position are so impregnable, the results of protection have been so beneficent, and the hope for the future of the people of this great Republic of the West, of this majestic temple of human liberty, is so wrapped up in its continued success, that we should hail with delight the most diligent search for the most accurate information, which can only tend to perpetuate our administration and bless the people. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Raven Oratorical Contest

The third annual oratorical contest for the Raven prizes was held last Friday night before an audience of students and Holland citizens in Winants Chapel.

Henry V. E. Stegeman of the Sophomore class took first place with his oration, "In the Van of the Nations." It was a carefully worked out product and brought high merit as to thought and style, while with his effective delivery Mr. Stegeman took an easy first.

Oliver Droppers of the Sophomore spoke in a pleasing way on the subject "The Development of an American Principle." The judges gave him second place. Gerrit De Matts of the Freshman spoke on "Individual Citizenship."

The judges on the contest were Rev. Dr. M. Koln, Grand Rapids Mich., Prof. G. H. Dubbink and Attorney C. Vander Meulen of this city.

Treble Clef Sings Roosevelt's Song

The most successful concert given by the Treble Clef Club was rendered Thursday evening to a fair sized but appreciative audience. The inclement weather of the week had considerable to do towards curtailing the size of the audience.

To show that weather conditions were responsible can be demonstrated by the fact that when the sun peeped out towards evening on the night of the concert more than one hundred tickets were sold within an hour.

The curtain at Carnegie hall was raised promptly at 8:15. The program opened with three numbers by the club, the bridal chorus from "The Rose Maiden," by Cowen with Smart's "Rest thee on This Mossy Pillow" and Gounod's "In April." Mrs. Bessie George Webb, a former Holland girl, responded to an encore after reading "Under the Noon-ing Tree" and the chorus gave its second series, closing with a splendid rendition of Sullivan's "Lost Chord." Mr. Helder's two numbers were well received although his voice was not at its best owing to a slight cold and fatigue brought on by the preliminary arrangement for both the Treble Clef and Wagner concerts which took place within the week.

The Brouwer family also played an important part in the evenings entertainment. Herman who played the violin obligato in Hollman's "Love Song" was a surprise to his many friends and Miss Jennie Brouwer sang the solo part in "Dawning of the Day" by Brewer which was well received. Miss Lucy Brouwer who is also one of the trio of the family of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Brouwer takes a prominent part among the altos.

Mrs. Webb gave a scene from Ben Hur to which she was forced to respond to two encores and the club gave a trio of pretty little songs, the well known Dutch lullaby "Trip a Trop a Trontjes" by Patty Stair being heartily encored. This is the song made famous by Ex-President Roosevelt as the only Dutch he knows and the verse he repeated to Queen Wilhelmina at his recent visit in the Netherlands and which pleased her greatly. We might also mention that when Mr. Roosevelt was running with Mr. McKinley as vice president on his visit to Holland he incidentally repeated this song in his speech.

Mr. McKays work at the piano calls for special comment, as his part was well handled which has much to do with successful chorus singing.

Improvements at Jenison Park

The Jenison Park management has been planning a big surprise for its patrons for this season. A six thousand dollar Wurlitzer pianochestra has been purchased and is now installed and in operation at the Park. The huge instrument, which is equal to a full 20 piece orchestra, has been set up in the dance hall at Jenison Park and will furnish the music for the dances.

The instrument is operated by a motor, altho it requires an expert operator to handle it in order to have the program properly arranged for an evening's dance. Everything in his machine is automatic, including the changing of the rolls, the playing of encores, etc. The instrument contains a full sized piano, drums, flutes, claronets, and all of the other pieces that go to make up a regular orchestra. These machines are used with a great deal of success in the big cafes and dancing pavilions of Chicago and other resort points and will attract a great deal of attention to this resort.

Commencing now dances will be given in the Jenison Park pavilion every night commencing at 7:45 p. m., and lasting until 11 o'clock. In addition to using this instrument for dancing, a program of music has been provided for Sunday concerts which will be given Sunday afternoons and evenings at the Park.

The patrons of the Park will also be pleased to know that a large new organ has been purchased for the Merry Go-Round. The old type pin cylinder organ, which has been on the Merry Go Round for several years has been sadly out of repairs for the past season and has been thrown on the junk pile.

These improvements at Jenison Park are only part of what has been done during the winter and spring to make this park much more attractive than ever before and those who have not been down there will be surprised when they see the result of this work.

The new attractions are being built now and will be ready sometime this month. This includes the Circle Swing, which with its 500 lights will add a great deal to the spectacular effect on the bay and the Merry Spray an entirely new feature the invention of a Michigan man which is to be built in a large pool of water 83 feet in diameter and consists of a number of boats which circle about the pool at a lively clip on an up and down track, giving a sensation of sailing over a rolling sea. This latter attraction will cost between four and five thousand dollars and is being put together in a Grand Rapids factory and will be installed in the Park at least by the fourth of July.

J. H. Weening died Saturday morning at his home, 200 East 13th street. He was 69 years old and is survived by three children, Harry, who is in California and Anna and Della who are at home. BIBLE STUDIES

"A CRUMB FROM THE CHILDREN'S TABLE."

Matthew 15:21-28—June 12.

"Great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt."—V. 28.

GOD loves the faithful and delights to have them trust in him. His chiefest blessings are for such. By reason of various conditions connected with our birth, it is not alike easy to all to accept the Divine promises and to shape life according to these, trusting that the rewards and blessings of the future will more than offset the sacrifices of the present. However, while only the faithful will attain the exceeding great and precious things of God's promises in this present age, we are glad that the Creator has still in reservation an inferior blessing for those who cannot exercise faith now, but who must be dealt with during the Millennial Age more along the lines of sight. Our present study well illustrates the Lord's grace towards those who trust him.

The Canaanitish woman was a heathen woman—one not an Israelite—one with whom the Lord had not entered into covenant relationship—one of those who at that time were without God and without hope, because the Divine provision for the blessing of the Gentiles was not yet opened up to them. When our Lord sent forth his Apostles to preach the Gospel, healing all manner of diseases and casting out devils, he instructed them to pass by all who were not Jews—Gentiles and Samaritans. His words were, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not, for I am not sent save to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." With a few exceptions our Lord's miracles were confined to the Jews. They alone were God's covenanted people. For this reason Jesus ignored the petition of the Canaanitish woman, crying "Have mercy on me, O Lord, Son of David! My daughter is grievously vexed with a devil." And later on he explained, "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel," and "It is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to the dogs."

The term "dogs" was applied to the Gentiles by the Jews as signifying their inferiority. Our Lord merely made use of an expression common in his day, and still common in Palestine. But note the woman's faith: She replied, "Yea, Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from the Master's table." What perseverance, what faith, was thus manifested! How evidently she believed the Lord to be the promised Messiah, the Heir of the throne of David! As Jesus intimated, she had more faith than a majority of the Jews. Her request was granted—"O woman, great is thy faith! Be it unto thee even as thou wilt." Her daughter was healed from that hour.

There are several lessons for us in this study. However degraded we may be by nature, by heredity, by environment; however outcast from God's favor, we may still know of the Divine compassion. The message is, "God is Love." If he chose first of all to manifest his favor towards Abraham's children, it did not signify that he had no love or care for the remainder of mankind; merely that the Divine purpose must flow out to mankind through Divinely-appointed channels and in God's due time. We may be sure that when we get to the standpoint of perfect knowledge in the hereafter we shall see wisdom in every feature of the Divine program. For instance, from the human standpoint it seems strange that God has permitted a reign of sin and death in the world for 6000 years, when he has the full power to speak the word and to overthrow the forces of evil and to inaugurate gracious influences of blessing for the deliverance of mankind from the power of sin and Satan, ignorance and superstition; to give light for darkness; knowledge of God for ignorance and blindness. Studying the Divine Plan of the Ages, we find the lesson to be that God will first select a Church class and subsequently use the elect Church as channels of blessing toward the world of mankind.

A little while, and the permission of sin and the trials and difficulties of the present life shall have served to chisel and polish the "very elect." A little while, and they shall be transformed to the glorious likeness of their Redeemer beyond the veil. And then a little while, and the blessings long promised to the world in general will be dispensed. The children of God will first be fed from this table, and then not merely crumbs will fall for the remainder of the race, but rich and bountiful provision, exceedingly and abundantly more than we could have asked or thought.

It is a great and important truth that many human beings are more or less completely obsessed by evil spirits—demons—not the spirits of human beings, but the fallen angels, as the Scriptures declare. Many battle for years against these influences of demons and, because not rightly informed of the Bible teaching on the subject, they come more and more under the occult influences with danger of entirely losing their reason. It was probably some such affliction as this which affected the daughter of the Canaanitess. She seemed to realize that there was only the one quarter from which she could get help. Hence her importunity, when she recognized the Lord.

In another sense of the word all sin and sickness may be said to be afflictions of the devil, because all are either directly, or through heredity, Satan's work. Thus our Lord declared that Satan had murdered our race by his falsehood to mother Eve—"He was a murderer from the beginning and abode not in the Truth." Through his lie our race has gone down into sickness, mental, moral and physical, and is going down rapidly to the tomb. Thank God for the great Deliverer; thank God also, for his great day of deliverance, the Millennial Age, now nigh at hand!

Sheriff Andre's Expenses Are Big Item in County Finances

In a former article I have shown what the light of publicity has done in our local police and justice departments. In this one I wish to show what effect it has had on our county. It will also show that the same light of publicity would do a world of good if thrown upon the justice courts of Grand Haven and the Sheriff's office.

A new fad for the children in school in this city is to surprise their teacher with an orange role. At a given signal the sound as of rolling balls as in "rip van winkle" is heard when each pupil rolls an orange towards the teachers desk. The two teachers who were fortunate to gather up a bushel of them were Miss Ewold, and Miss DeWeerd. Some of the arbitrary youths who had a score to settle with the teacher apparently handed her lemons.

A family reunion was held yesterday at the home of John Grevenoged in honor of his 86th birthday anniversary. All the children were present. They are Mrs. Henry Kleis of Muskegon, Mrs. A. G. A. R. Encampment Doings

Holland, Mich., June 9.—Holland expects to entertain the biggest crowd in her history on the days of June 21, 22 and 23 when the state encampment of the G. A. R. will be held there. From Tuesday morning until Thursday night and even into Friday the city will swarm with guests from all over Michigan and the political pot will boil as it has not boiled in Western Michigan in many a day.

More than 2,000 members of the great army which fought for the preservation of the nation and more than 1,000 members of the Women's Relief corps and the Ladies of the G. A. R. will be present while distinguished men of Michigan and the United States will make stirring speeches at the camp fires which will be features of the encampment. In addition all the resort hotels will be running and Jenison Park, the famed resort of the Holland Interurban will be running full blast.

Excursion steamers will be on hand to take the visitors on trips out into the lake and no stone will be left unturned to make the stay of the visitors pleasant.

Wednesday will be the big day of the encampment. On that day will be the big parade when thousands of men will tramp the streets of Holland. In the parade which takes place at one o'clock in the afternoon will be Governor Warner and staff mounted, National Commander Van Sant, Department Commander Greenfield of the G. A. R. and his staff. The troop of calvary from South Haven, City officials of Holland and distinguished guests in carriages. Among these latter will be Senators Burrows and Smith, Congressmen Townsend and Diekema and probably several others of the Michigan delegation at Washington, Lieut. Gov. Patrick H. Kelly, Hon. Chas. S. Osborne, Hon. Amos S. Musselman and a large number of other politicians who will be present to talk to the old soldiers. In the evening will be the big campfire when Senators Smith and Burrows will speak as well as the prominent men of the Grand Army. In the afternoon will be also the big out of doors meeting in Centennial Park when all the politicians will be given an opportunity to talk to the crowds.

Tuesday night one of the most interesting features of the occasion will be the Children's campfire for which a program of excellence is being arranged.

For the accommodation of the guests all the resort hotels will be open and Jenison park will be at its prettiest. Many special features have been added to the resort for this occasion. The Holland Interurban will give 20 minute service from 6 a. m. until midnight and later if necessary between Holland and Grand Rapids and 10 minute service between Holland and Jenison Park and Macatawa. The Pere Marquette will also run special trains to help get the crowds to Holland, which for three days will be the center of observation of all Michigan.

A fight over a Girl.

Joe Simian and his opponent, who just arrived this morning from Germany, coming from darkest Africa to Germany. Not reaching Grand Rapids by a Pullman, but coming by United States express. The girl who the fight was over is called Sallie. She has been living in Grand Rapids about seven weeks. The fight started immediately upon the arrival of this African cousin. There was considerable loud talk, but no serious damage was suffered, as no knives or revolvers were used, as these Africans fight with their teeth. It turned into a free for all fight, Joe, Esau, Johana and Sallie, also the new cousin participating. No arrests were made, for when the officer arrived all was quiet. It is a very laughable sight and one never to be seen again. Five of these treat man-like apes or chimpansees holding receptions daily at 62 Pearl street. Admission has been reduced for children to 5 cents.

Also the first bird of paradise ever brought alive to this country.

Lands a fine Position.

Perhaps one of the quickest moves ever made in accepting a position was that of John M. Slagh who takes his A. M. degree at the University of Michigan in June. Last Thursday afternoon Supt. Baker, of the Manistee, Mich., schools dropped into Ann Arbor, looking for a professor of Latin in the Manistee High School. In less than an hour Mr. Slagh had been engaged although he had not previously been in communication with Mr. Baker with regard to the position. The professorship is an excellent one with good prospects of advancement and with a salary of $900 for the first year. The closing of the deal was expedited because of the fact that Mr. Slagh had an offer of a position to teach Latin and German in Lincoln College, Lincoln, Ill., and the Manistee superintendent was anxious to secure a man of Mr. Slagh's qualifications.

Mr. Slagh is a native of New Holland, where his parents live on a farm. After graduating from the New Holland public schools, he entered the Preparatory Department of Hope College in 1899. At Hope Mr. Slagh pursued the regular classical course, graduating from the institution in June, 1907. The following year he taught in the New Gronigen School, and entered the University of Michigan two years ago. There Mr. Slagh specialized in Latin and Greek and will receive his Master's degree in those branches the last of this month. Mr. Slagh has a reputation at Hope College and at Michigan for careful scholarship, and his many friends anticipate a brilliant career for him in his chosen profession.

Political Notes

John VanderWerp, the Muskegon attorney has announced his candidacy for the state senate against Tom Bolt who defeated him two years ago in a close and pretty fight. When Luke Lugers of Holland retired after serving his two terms he did so in favor of VanderWerp. The cards however got muddled in some way and Bolt beat him to it. Now VanderWerp is going to try it again.

John F. Van Anrooy of Holland one of the candidates for the Republican nomination of register of deeds, was in the city. Grand Haven Tribune.

Hubert Pelgrin, candidate for county treasury, is meeting with a great deal of encouragement relative to his candidacy.
