College removes Kletz's 'sexist' pinball machine

by Rychard Bouwens
staff writer

A few weeks ago, a pinball machine was removed from the game room next to the Kletz cafeteria because some concerned Hope students believed the machine was overly provocative.

"Future Spa," the pinball machine's name, contained numerous depictions of females and males arrayed in attire such as skimpy swimwear and body suits.

On November 7, the anchor printed a letter from Elizabeth Schultz, describing in full detail the depictions which garnished the machine and publicizing what she believed to be an oversight in Hope's sexual harassment policy.

Apparently some students notified Ann Bakker-Gras, the head of the Social Action Committee, and she supervised the removal of the pinball machine.

"I found out about it after the fact...." - Sandy Harmon

"They got a hold of Ann Bakker-Gras. She's the SAC director (SAC; administers to the games in there)."

The removal of the machine has remained predominately unnoticed by the Hope community however. Harmon added, "We really haven't had any comments. No one has really said anything."

Milestone takes a look back

by Scott A. Kaukonen
news editor

Sporting a "History of Hope College" theme, the 1989-90 Milestones have arrived on campus.

Last year's story is interspersed with photographs of Hope's past, many of which were pulled from the Joint Archives.

"Some people may say it's only a yearbook about last year," said editor Ben Opipari ('91), "but it gives you a sense of perspective on the school. You just don't realize that Hope has been around since 1866."

Old photos include such highlights as Hope College senior photos of current Hope professors, scenes of the campus before construction of many of the current facilities, and past athletic teams, greeks and student organizations.

According to Opipari, a similar idea was used with a Hope yearbook in the 1930s—except that one went year-by-year (1866 to 1930s), took two years to complete and was over 400 pages in length.

Opipari, in his second year as editor of the Milestone, has tried to make the yearbook more contemporary. "College yearbooks tend to be more traditional - gothic buildings for example...We're trying to use different colors, flashier lettering. The problem is if you get too much into that it looks too much like a high school yearbook with questions like, 'What was your favorite movie?'

Opipari, who had no experience with yearbooks before taking the helm of the Milestone at the beginning of last year, has surrounded himself with a staff..."

Powerful wine, 'liquid crack,' gains student fans

by Rychard Bouwens
staff writer

A powerful new "fortified" wine reportedly is gaining popularity among college students, prompting several nationwidemostly Christian education groups to issue warnings on campuses in recent weeks.

The wine Cisco, which some students refer to as "liquid crack" because of its strength, is becoming a preferred drink among college students "in some places" because it offers "a cheap and powerful high," said Jeffrey Hon of the National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence.

"The wine Cisco, which some students refer to as 'liquid crack' because of its strength, is becoming a preferred drink among college students...."

The group circulated letters about Cisco at the State University of New York (SUNY) College at Brockport recently, warning students of its effects.

Spanish professor writes 'thematic dictionary'

(BOE) - A book by Dr. Ion Agheana, professor of romance languages at Hope College, has been published by Plasma De Norte of Hanover, N.H.

It is the complexity of Borges' work that makes a thematic dic-tionary necessary, according to Agheana. "His work is so culturally complex and diver-sified that one cannot possibly read the man without some tool that would enable the person to detect the theme," he said.

Agheana spent seven years writing the 380-page text, of which a Spanish edition will be published next year.

He hopes his book will serve as a timeless reference work for readers of Borges, whose writing has been translated into several languages and is studied at colleges and universities throughout the world.

Agheana has been a member of the Hope faculty since 1979. He earned the Licencse es Lettres from the University of Bucharest in 1961, and also holds master's and doctorate degrees from Harvard University.

McDonalds donates cookies to desert operation

Grand Rapids, Michigan—Grand Rapids area McDonald's Restaurants are donating nearly 10,000 boxes of Mcdonaldland Cookies that will be sent this Fri-day to Operation Desert Shield in Saudi Arabia.

Friends And Relatives (F.A.R) of Desert Shield recently asked Pat Boden, owner-operator of four Grand Rapids McDonald's restaurants, if area McDonald's restaurants would donate food condiments that would be added to special "care packages" earmarked for Desert Shield. On behalf of the Greater Grand Rapids McDonald's, she took the request one step further and offered 80 cases of McDonaldland Cookies (120 cases per box) at no cost.

F.A.R. and the Disabled American Veterans have been seeking a variety of donations from food to personal care items to musical tapes to make up packages for American service people in Saudi Arabia, with the first shipment leaving November 30.

For inquiries regarding donations or information about F.A.R., contact Barb Harmen at 616-457-2643.

McDonald's is the world's leading foodservice organization. It serves 22 million people each day in more than 11,500 restaurants in 53 countries. Seventy-five percent of McDonald's restaurants are locally operated by independent entrepreneurs.

Communications professor writes argument book

(BOE) - "Critical Thinking: The Analysis of Arguments," a textbook written by Hope College professor James Herrick, has been published by Gorsuch-Searle & Harlow Publishers of Scottsdale, Ariz.

Herrick, associate professor of communication at Hope, wrote the text after a critical thinking and argumentation. The book was released on Oct. 1.

"The goal of the book is to provide students with tools to test the reasonableness of arguments," said Herrick, who spent three years writing the 300-page text. The book is a result of Herrick's long-standing interest in argumentation theory.

According to Herrick, demand for such texts from publishers is fairly high, reflecting a trend in higher education toward requiring critical thinking. Herrick teaches two sections of the introductory course "Analytic Skills in Communication" per semester, and his department at Hope requires the course of all students earning a major or minor in communication.

Music department students to present computer concert

The Hope College music department will be present the first computer music concert.

Featured will be several student compositions. Students used the department's new computer music lab to produce their work. The concert will take place Friday, Dec. 7, at 4 p.m. in Snow auditorium.

Holiday party helps needy kids

The Fraternal Society and the Sigma Sigma sorority will by hosting their third annual Christmas party for underprivileged kids this afternoon, Dec. 5.

A Frater will be dressing up as Santa Claus and a Sigma will be dressing up as Mrs. Claus. They will then pass out presents to the kids, who were chosen from a local elementary school.

"It's something to help out the community," said Fraternal Society member James O'Neal ('92). "It really promotes Christmas cheer."

College offers trip to Greece

There will be an informational meeting for anyone interested in the 1991 Hope College May-June term in Greece. It will be held in the Langworth Resource Center of Graves Hall (Room 201) on Wednesday, December 11 at 7:00 p.m. Provost Nyenhuis will show slides of previous trips to Greece. If you are interested or would like more information, contact the Provost's office or Prof. Kelly Ong, or at least strongly encouraging, students to enroll in courses in critical thinking. Herrick teaches two sections of the introductory course "Analytic Skills in Communication" per semester, and his department at Hope requires the course of all students earning a major or minor in communication.

Urbana filled to capacity

Urbana--For the third time in a row, the Urbana Student Mission Convention is filled to capacity. A flood of registrations postmarked prior to a November 16 price increase filled the remaining space available for the convention, held Dec. 27-31, 1990 at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

InterVarsity received about 2,500 registration on November 19 and 20, raising the total gross number received to about 20,000. Based on historic trends, convention planners expect about 1,000 cancellations and "no shows," reducing the number of the guaranteed expected to just less than 18,000.

InterVarsity will be turning away delegates "with great regret," Dan Harrison says. "We wish the facilities were larger so we could accommodate more of them, but we just do not have any more space." He adds that those turned away will be offered alternative ways of benefiting from the convention.

College cultural centers turn into battlegrounds

By B.J. Hoepnner

"CPS" — Cultural centers — meant to ease the isolation some minority students feel on campus — are turning into battlegrounds at some schools.

In late October, about 60 students at Smith College camped out in the school's main administration building to demand a multicultural center.

The sit-in was organized by leaders of minority student groups, who complained they had to share their office space with the graduate school and the school of social work.

Meanwhile, students at Oregon State University (OSU) closed the school's black cultural center Oct. 30 to protest several racial "incidents at the school.

"We closed the center in protest until the university would hear proposals on ways to improve race relations," said student Jeff Revels, director of the cultural center.

Minority and cultural diversity centers have become issues elsewhere, too.

In October, at the University of Chicago, representatives of black and women's groups submitted proposals for cultural and education centers.

Administrators at the University of California at Davis are planning for a Cross-Cultural Diversity Center, which would house a library and resources for African Americans, Chicano-Latinos, Asian Pacific Islanders and Native American students.

Minority student groups are "the American way," declared Frank Watkins of the Rainbow Coalition in Washington, D.C., an organization that promotes the causes of minority groups.

Milestone

"From his work with this yearbook, Opipari now has "a better sense of time, and (of) long things that will take get done. For example, we waited until the last minute for getting the photos of dorms and campus. Matt Johnson did more photography than any photographer should have to do."

This year's Milestone was published by Walsworth Publishing. "From what I've seen, Walsworth is far above the competition in terms of what they have to offer," said Opipari. "They're great. They've gone out of their way to do things for us."

In response to a recent anchor story concerning collision on the part of yearbook publishers in Washington, Opipari tried to contact the Milestone's publishing representative, but has been unable to reach him. "But I would assume nothing is wrong," said Opipari. "They (Walsworth) were not involved in the case (in Washington) and they do most of their work in the Midwest."

Those who have prepaid for their yearbooks may pick them up Wednesday between 10 a.m. and 12:30 p.m., 2:30 p.m. and 4:30 p.m. or Thursday between 10 a.m. and 11:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. Those who would like to purchase one, but have not prepaid, may view books for 25 cents beginning Thursday. About 300 copies are still available for purchase. In all cases, yearbooks can be obtained at the new Milestone office in the Kletz behind the video arcade.

Media class makes video
by Pam Lundberg
feature editor

As a joint project between the Advanced Media Production class and the Alumni office, an alumni video is being produced.

According to Alumni director Janet Pinkham, this video is "designed to introduce alumni to what is happening on Hope's campus now and in the future."

The video is designed for Hope staff to take to Alumni regional gatherings. It should be ready beginning next semester.

The video is approximately fifteen minutes in length. It has four parts, or story lines to it. The first part deals with media on campus. This includes the anchor and WTHS. The Dow Center is the basis for the second part as this facility is used by students, faculty, staff and members of the community. The third part, entitled "West End of Campus," is an overview of the VanderWerf, Van Zoren and Van Wylen complex which is new to many alumni. The last part includes Pull, Nykerk, Homecoming and Vespers and is based on Hope traditions.

This video is being filmed and edited primarily by students of the course. Therefore, "it is not only practice for them but lets Alumni know what opportunities are available to students," said Pinkham.

Pinkham, in conclusion, said, "It's an interesting video for people to see who do not get back to campus. It should give them a real good picture of what's happening today."
Co-dependents give more than they receive

Counseling group gives co-dependents outlet

by Kris Olenik
assistant news editor

(Editors' note: Student names in this article have been changed to protect their identities.)

Darell Schregardus, Director of Counseling Services, leads a support group called Adult Children of Alcoholics (ACOA). Members deal with their problems as a group giving each other support and challenging each other.

Schregardus regularly meets with two students, Ann and Kathy, and has started meeting with some others.

According to recent studies, about 10% to 15% of all college students come from a background of alcoholic abuse.

Ann, whose mother is an alcoholic and she was seeing a counselor in high school and then continued to seek help at Hope through the ACOA support group.

Kathy's father is an alcoholic and she came to Hope two years ago.

Schregardus said, "Students who have experienced a dysfunctional relationship with parents, due to alcoholism, get caught in certain role and inter-role beliefs and feelings.

Children often learn harmful things: don't think, don't talk, don't feel, don't trust. The group tries to provide a place where these beliefs can change," he said.

"We talk about stuff that is going on with our parents as it comes up...and then we look at how it affects our relationships with other people and decisions we make," Ann said.

Schregardus said that both girls were stressed about how hard they tried to please their parents. When asked how their relationship with the alcoholic parent affected their daily lives, Kathy said, "I think one big thing is an ability to make decisions or believe in your decisions. If there's an alcoholic in the family you have to please that person and keep them happy. They're told that what you think is wrong all the time and you start to wonder. Do I know what's right and wrong?"

Ann added, "My mom is very dominating and a lot of the times she made me feel wrong and I was scared to talk to her. I felt like I had to achieve a lot to please her and get any recognition."

"They also deal with not knowing what to expect. There are good and bad times, as in any relationship, but the bad times seem to be more extreme. There's always an extra amount of guardedness," Schregardus said.

"Ann, who gets along with her mother most of the time, said, "Sometimes I know what I'm doing wrong and she won't react unless I depend on the time."

Kathy said that she had not established a close relationship with her father because "she has to be careful when she has something important that she wants to bring up."

Both Ann and Kathy said that they have learned a lot from being in the support group in regard to their specific situations and how to ease the tension in the relationship.

"It's helped me to deal with (my mother)," Ann said, "I'm not frightened of her or what she'll say. I have more self-esteem and I'm able to confront things more. I've also learned that I'm very different from my mother and I'm less afraid of being like her. I know I can be who I am and not my mother."

"The fear of being like an alcoholic parent, the fear of being a parent at all, is somewhat common for children of alcoholics because they haven't had a good role model to learn from," Roehling said.

Kathy is dealing more with the fact that she spent most of her life hating her father because of how he acted when he was drinking. She said, "The group helped me to understand alcoholism as a disease. It helped me to separate my father from the disease so I could see him as a person."

"They also deal with not knowing what to expect. There are good and bad times, as in any relationship, but the bad times seem to be more extreme. There's always an extra amount of guardedness," Schregardus said.

Fundraising effort to benefit current college operations

(HOPE) - The annual Hope "College Holland and Zeeland community" fund-raising campaign will be held Thursday, Nov. 29 under the leadership of Nancy Heeringa, president of Trendway Corporation.

"The campaign, which this year has a goal of $310,000, is part of an annual effort by business people in Holland and Zeeland to raise funds to support current operations of their college. Business leaders will join Hope faculty and staff members in making calls on more than 600 area businesses from 9-11 a.m.

Like many business leaders involved in the campaign, Heeringa is committed to Hope despite having attended college elsewhere.

"Hope College has been a part of the community for a long time, and its relationship with the community, and certainly the business community, is very special," said Heeringa, who was named 1990's Small Businessman of the Year for the State of Michigan. "I saw working with the campaign as an interesting challenge—to try to help promote that special relationship."

"From a selfish standpoint, it has been an investment in my footing," Heeringa said. "Trendway employs several Hope graduates, as I know many other companies in the area do." He said. "Many Hope graduates serve the community in all types of leadership positions, so we're investing in our community's future."

Heeringa also noted that he does have a Hope family history: both of his parents graduated from Hope, and his father, George, served on the college's Board of Trustees. "I thought it was one of those things that I could help Hope just a little bit as the alma mater of my mother and my father," he said.

"Heeringa's duties as a resident of the Holland and Zeeland campaign have included recruiting the business callers, sending solicitation letters to the businesses being visited and challenging the callers at the breakfast the morning of the campaign."

Dr. John H. Jacobson, president of Hope College, believes that the college is extremely fortunate in the support it receives from local community members and business leaders. "We are very fortunate at Hope College in the degree of support and enthusiasm for Hope that we find in our community," Jacobson said. "I've never known a college that enjoyed such cordial relations with its community."

"We're very grateful for that and are committed to doing everything that we can to continue that cordial relationship and to making the Holland-Zeeland area a good place to live and work," Jacobson said.

Hope relies heavily on contributions from businesses, alumni and other friends of the college to fund both its academic program and other activities, many of which link Hope with the area businesses and schools. Among others, local grade school and high school students learn and grow through Upward Bound and the Children's After School Achievement (CASA) Program. The Program for the Academically Talented at Hope (PATH) provides challenges for local gifted and talented students, and the Kellogg Science Education Program links the college and area school systems in both improving science education at local schools and training future teachers.

In addition to contributing funds, businesses also support the college's programs in other ways. For example, several area businesses allow Hope students to work through internships, adding a vital practical dimension to their academic work.

Sentinel donates 30,000 negatives to Archives

(HOPE) - The Joint Archives of Holland, the area's history research center, has received a significant addition to its collections through the recent donation of nearly 30,000 photographic negatives from the 1954-56 issues of The Holland Sentinel.

"Along with the recent addition of the William C. Wickersham papers, this is one of the most significant collections of material ever donated to the Joint Archives," said Larry J. Wagenaar, archivist. Wagenaar also noted that the photographs fill a gap in the Archives' photographic collections.

"Up to this time the Archives has been able to offer good collections of photos from Holland prior to 1950," Wagenaar said. "With the addition of the 'Sentinel' photos, full documentation of recent history will be possible, representing a significant move forward in preserving our time for the future."

"The Holland Sentinel" is undergoing a major renovation project which made transferring the negatives to the Joint Archives at the present time a logical step. Publisher Clay Ballas, was instrumental in arranging the collection available, and photographer Dave Odette helped accomplish the collection's move and the negatives' initial organization.

Many of the earlier negatives are high quality, four-inch by five-inch images, while the post-1970 shots are on 35 millimeter film. The 35 millimeter materials were labeled and dated by the "Sentinel" photographers.

The Archives' staff will be working through the next several years organizing and making copy prints from the negatives so that they can be used easily by patrons who visit the repository. According to Wagenaar, volunteers are needed to help identify and organize the images, and persons interested should contact them at the Archives at (616) 394-7798.

The Joint Archives of Holland cares for the archival collections of the Holland Historical Trust, Hope College and Western Theological Seminary, making them available for research and educational use. The Archives is located on the ground floor of the Van Wyen Library.

Santa could bring many gifts to Hope

Since everyone is busy with end of the semester stuff, the anchor's Editorial Board has compiled a list for Santa. These are the presents that different groups and individuals can expect to find under their chimney.

Three subscriptions to the Washington Post -- for WTHS. These would look great in the three kiosks that Student Congress is looking into getting to improve access to news on campus. Newspapers are much superior to an Associated Press news wire, anyway, aren't they? This way you don't have to clutter the airwaves with information that people could go stand outside to get.

Applause and respect -- for the food service and Kletz people for an improved menu, Kletz issues, the food survey, senior Kletz privilege, Monday Night football and the willingness to try new ideas.

A lethal injection -- for the dead horse of Nykerk-Pull sexism. The issue is important and the Campus Life Board needs to make an informed, considered decision. Then we need to stand by it. There are other issues that could use some organized letter writing and protesting. Let a decision be made and let this horse rest in peace.

A crystal Robert Schuller sculpture -- for the Board of Trustees' Buildings and Grounds committee. This would fit with the smooth lines of the library and look great in the J. Mutsche alcove. We bet even the Campus Arts committee would approve it. Oh shoot, we forgot, their opinion doesn't matter.

Higher tuition -- for all the students who did not go to Monday night's forum with the administration. This was another missed opportunity to tell the president and assorted other bigwigs what you like and dislike about Hope College. Now you can bitch and moan about tuition while writing the check next fall.

A MIAA championship -- for the Hope College football team. You did a great job restoring respect to the football program.

"Oh Captain, my Captain" tee shirts -- for Mike Theune ('92) and the rest of the Opus staff for spending student poetry readings and putting out a superior magazine. Maybe verse ain't dead afterall.

Bill Reid-Haig's autobiography for Jim Monnett ('91) who has resigned as co-editor to go back to writing reviews. Here's your first assignment. You always said we should run more book reviews.

An autographed painting of Dick Butkus for our Student Congress officers. Thanks for being such great quarterbacks.

Sleep -- for all you sad beasts who are tired of computers, research, oral exams, 4 a.m. 7-Eleven runs, deadlines and recus.

Thanks for playing. See you next semester when we'll be bringing you more fun and excitement.

Letter to the Editor

Christianity not exclusive

Many religions produce intellectuals

Dear Editor:

I could not help feeling disturbed after reading the letter written by Mr. Piersma. While writing that Christianity is a religion of higher intellectual thinking he went on to demonstrate the foolishness of Mr. Pierce by calling his ideas "moral, ethical, and intellectual nonsense.

Faith in Jesus Christ does not allow one to ridicule the ideas of other people. Rather, Christianity is a religion that should welcome the ideas of other people, and not restrict their thinking because one person sees things differently than another.

While Christianity has produced many intellectuals, which Mr. Piersma pointed out very well, there is no direct correlation between religion and intelligence. With this in mind, let us take a closer look at some of the things mentioned by Mr. Piersma.

Mr. Piersma is correct in stating that Christianity is a religion of higher thinking, and I'm sure Mr. Pierce would agree. However, other religions emphasize the importance of self-discovery and are quite capable of higher thinking.

For instance, Judaism has produced many outstanding scholars, Albert Einstein is one of many prime examples. Not only was Einstein a devout Jew, but a scholar whose mathematical principles revolutionized society in more ways than many Christian thinkers.

Let us keep in mind that it was not faith in Jesus Christ that motivated Einstein. There are many people throughout history who were neither Christian or Jewish who have proven to us that religion alone does not determine one's intellectual capabilities. Plato and Aristotle were neither Christian or Jewish and, yet, they are considered to be intellectuals.

Furthermore, many Christian philosophers, in particular C.S. Lewis, are neo-Platonist themselves. More recently, philosophers such as Albert Camus, Friedrich Nietzsche, and Stephen Hawking have enlightened many of us without espousing any religion at all.

One should realize, then, that Christianity is a religion of higher thinking but to exclude the progress of non-Christian thinkers would invalidate and minimize the true progress of society.

I would now like to address Mr. Piersma's view on Hope College, in particular the idea that making rules is important for the benefit of the college. First of all Mr. Piersma states that Hope College is not the real world, that is a contradiction. Where, may I ask, are we then? We are as much in the real world as any other college and any other people.

Secondly, putting blind trust in any institution is foolish. While it is true that rules are made for the benefit of society, as Ms. Smith and Mr. Jarvis pointed out, it is also true that rules are made for the benefit of those in control. One pronounced example is the case of the White government of South Africa, whose, rules and guidelines for the native countrymen have violated every human rights law. Not only is this justified by their Christian faith but also by their financial backers, one of which is Hope College.

It is here I find your point most disturbing. Mr. Piersma is that an example of superior Christian intellectualism.

Finally, when a society is based on pluralism it insures all ideas and thoughts will be considered equally, whether or not they are from a Christian or non-Christian religion. All Christian ideas do not temper aggressive self-centeredness; remember the Holocaust. Christianity is not a religion that advocates love, rather it stresses the importance of intimacy and equality among people.

In conclusion, I would like to mention that Mr. Piersma is an example of superior Christian intellectualism. Finally, when a society is based on pluralism it insures all ideas and thoughts will be considered equally, whether or not they are from a Christian or non-Christian religion. All Christian ideas do not temper aggressive self-centeredness; remember the Holocaust. Christianity is not a religion that advocates love, rather it stresses the importance of intimacy and equality among people.

Sincerely,

Ramee W. Zabed

Individuals apologize for All College Sing outburst

Dear Editors,

This is not a letter against anyone. Instead this is a letter of apology to everyone at Hope College that we have offended. First and foremost we would like to say we are sincerely sorry for our rude outburst at All College Sing which has, from what we have heard, upset quite a few people. We did not mean to offend anyone. We thought of SAC on their grand job of the organization of the event. And feel extremely bad that you feel we do not appreciate everything you did. We are also apologetic to all the Greeks. We realize that all Greeks are now being looked at as something even worse on Hope's campus. Please forgive us for that was not our intention.

When we yelled at Hugh Fink, we were merely stating our own feelings. We were doing so as individuals who think alone. We hope everyone on Hope's campus can realize that even Greeks think alone. We were not yelling hoping that it would be taken as the thought of all the Greek organizations, and feel confused as to why our outburst is being put on display. Yet this is not the reason we have written our letter. This is merely a letter of apology. Please take this into consideration. Thank you for your time. Once again we are extremely sorry.

Shopping the Neiman Marcus way

For my family, I turn to a previous year catalogues. From 1990 I choose His and Her Beechcraft propeller airplanes for my aunt and uncle. For a mere $18,700 I will order a two-person mini-submarine for my dear aquatic brother. If I can't get the mini-sub. For my mom, I order a hot air balloon for a mere $6,850. For my friend's dog there is an authentic ten-gallon hat for under $500. Since I have money and am in the gift giving mood, I will order a reproduction of Noah's Ark for my church. The ark is delivered from New Orleans for $6,000 plus transportation. Just in case your someone special doesn't like your choices, you can always return the items for credit as easily as you purchased them.

Finally, why not this Neiman Marcus' His and Her diamonds. The gentleman's is a 21 carat pearshaped diamond and the lady's is a 56 carat starburst diamond. These two exquisite diamonds are yours for only 2 million dollars. Shopping and handling included.

Now that I've finished shopping the Neiman Marcus way, how will I ever readjust to blue-collar specials at K-Mart?
I resigned as co-editor of the anchor last week. With that has come a lot of "Why's?" But the "why's" haven't been limited to the newspaper. They've been everywhere lately. Along with "Why'd I quit?" there are "Why aren't I studying?" "Why can't I see that America must stop Hussein?" "Why am I going to seminary?" and "Why am I not going to find a job writing?"

The worst "why" question though went largely unsaid until a few weeks ago. This one came from a staff member following some perverse comment I made during a meeting. She looked at me and asked, "You're not really going to seminary, are you?" She could have easily just said, "Why?"

Why, indeed? Why resign? Why seminary? Why would God want someone like me in ordained ministry? Shouldn't I just stick to writing and get a job with some newspaper somewhere?

Now most people on campus have not asked any of these questions about me. I should hope not. Who am I anyway? What do the questions surrounding me have to do with you?

Come back to my last day in London last May. I was sick yesterday with appendicitis, but it is my last day. Alone I go to see the Towerley Diakobolas, the discus thrower. After feasting on one of the greatest sculptures in the world I amble toward Covent Gardens.

It's in the mid-60s and the sun in shining as I stroll into an Italian neighborhood. My body aches and I tell a lie to myself that I feel fine. On Endell Street I eat lunch in a family restaurant and have the biggest, best jacket (baked) potato of my life. The cheese and butter melt together in my mouth. Two homemade chocolate and peanut butter bars later and I'm back on the street.

After buying some presents in Covent Gardens I stroll down the Strand and follow it over to the Waterloo Bridge. The sun glitters over the Thames. I continue to the Royal National Theatre and pick up a student stand-by ticket to Stephen Sondheim's "Sunday in the Park with George." My seat is dead center toward the front. The show is sold out and marvelous.

A line from it floors me. George Serrat the impressionist painter is having a crisis of will. Dot his former lover says, "Yes, it has all been done before...but not by you."

It has all been done before, but not by you. I roll the line over and over in my head as I stand on the bridge and watch the Thames. The clouds have rolled in. Rain is threatening. But not by you.

Not by me.

And my choice is not by me either. I thank that staff member who vocalized my biggest doubt about God's call to me to go to seminary. She gave words to my cry. I've been telling God since I met Him five years ago that I am not minister material.

I tried sociology research and English. I wrote a play. I buried myself in the anchor. I never set out to be editor. Though, I did want to write a column. Over 75 of them later I'm stuck wondering if I've ever used the column to say what needs to be said. Fortunately, God has put meaning that I never imagined within some of those columns. They've struck people. One (to my knowledge) column even brought a guy to tears with the pain of it all.

I hardly knew the guy, but he said that that column was what he was about. It was about a five year old named Scotty. Yeah, right, just like this one is about the anchor.

What that column, some others, Scotty, seminary, appendicitis, that jacket potato, the Thames, Serrat's painting, and my entire life are all about is Jesus Christ. A cliche? Yes. Why? Because a majority of people at Hope don't know Him. Sure there are Christians on campus. And many of us do throw the first stone. But when my column strikes someone, it isn't my writing ability, but God saying, "Here I am."

"Why?" they ask me. "What about...?" I ask myself. But God, I have the proverbial dirty mind," I yell. "Anyone can see that I am not minister material!"

But God says, "'My grace is all you need, for your power is strongest when you are weak.' I am most happy then, to be proud of my weaknesses, in order to feel the protection of Christ's power over me." (II Cor. 12:9)

Yes, it has all been done before, but not by you. Not by me.

But by Him.

(Fomer Editor's Note:
Writing a weekly column for four years has been difficult. But always I've known in the back of my mind that Ellen was reading. I never got to know her, but each year somehow she lets me know that she is still reading. Thank you.)

Waterfront Park built from landfill

By guest writer

the anchor

December 5, 1990

Surely it was early evening. Outside there was a chill in the air. My partner and I walked down toward our destination, Holland’s Window on the Waterfront Park. I was familiar with the park. As a Hope College student, I ran down to the park a few times with my physical education class.

For those who are unfamiliar with the park, the location is between River and Columbia Avenues. The main entrance is a block down from the Pizza Hut on Columbia. The Window on the Waterfront Park is setting along the Macatawa River marsh. This swamp-marshland was previously developed for a waste treatment plant which moved to its present site downstream about half a mile. With this land now vacant, many people began to dump trash there. A local resident told us that it was very disgusting. The city decided in November of 1986 to clean up this site and build a park. People in the community gave total support to this idea, and later decided to complete the park in 1987 for Michigan’s Sesquicentennial.

Before we reached the entrance to the park from Columbia Avenue, we noticed various run-down buildings. Construction work was in progress. One of the workers was leaning on the top of the scaffolding and watching a football game in progress across the street. The football players appeared to be in their mid-twenties, and different teams appear nightly. A handful of spectators, from grandparents to babies, were intently watching and cheering. The crowd was friendly and we received a couple of “hellos” from them.

The small parking lot was full. To our left we could see what resembled a large red window. We walked to it, and realized that this was the symbol for the park. A carved wooden sign above this huge red frame of a window stated, “Window on the Waterfront.” Through this “window” without walls, we could see the river.

Boardwalks formed to the left of the “window.” Bikers and joggers pass, but besides the people watching the football game, there were no other people on the boardwalk tonight. A neighbor near the park told us the park is busier during the day. Many mothers come with their children, and some business people from downtown take their lunches down to the park to spend an hour or so.

Reaching the top of a small hill, we found a lookout on the roof of what appeared to be an old brick building. Two benches were on top of this building, and we decided to sit and watch the Geese swimming between the scattered islands in the river. DeZwann windmill stood majestically on the opposite bank. Our later research would tell us that the building we stood upon was actually an old pump house. In earlier days, when the waste plant was still there, this pump house had been used to pump cold water out of the river to cool the inside machinery of the plant. It then recycled the warm water back to the river. Looking down at a lower observation deck on the ground, we saw that someone had defaced the deck by spraying shaving cream in obscene words and strange designs.

Many changes had taken place to build the park. First, the land we were standing on was dry sediments that had been dredged out of the river. These dredgings had taken about ten years to complete. Next, a local resident told us that where the football field is standing, a large covered grandstand was removed before the park started construction. Lastly, the dump area had to be cleaned up. All of these changes took place gradually.

Turning back toward the boardwalk, we sighted another small brick building tucked into the side of the hill. Feeling a bit adventurous, we decided to explore. Slipping and sliding our way down the hill we finally landed at the entrance of the small building. Inside were broken glass bottles, old candy wrappers, plastic silverware, and some old electrical wiring on the floor. Looking up, there were wires connected on the ceiling where an old light fixture dangled from the rafters.

This particular building was unable to identify through our research. Our logical guess is that this small building was somehow connected with the old pump house.

We decided to head back up the hill and onto the path. Pushing through the tree branches and overgrowth, we climbed safely onto the path above us.

While marching down the winding path, we stopped to take a look around us. Tonight we could see and hear the wildlife along the river. Ducks were flying in the air and swimming in the water. As we approached the bank two frightened ducks flew to a more secluded spot around the trash can on the ground.

The park’s sesquicentennial monument stands next to the picnic area. Two flags are flown at its ends, the United States flag on the right, and the state of Michigan flag to the left. There are many plaques on the monument, with engraved patron names on them for different amounts of contributions they gave to the park. But some thoughtless person had scratched profane words on top of the beautifully engraved plaques.

Our observation is that vandalism and littering are big problems in the park. A local resident told us that it’s a shame that the vandalism can’t be more controlled. She says the vandalism is a small price to pay for the beautiful park and the use that the park receives. Our studies show that monies are used to replace lights and torn down fences, and to hire people to pick up the litter scattered across the park. The people of the community are paying extra money. Others within the same community keep vandalizing what some think is a beautiful improvement.

A bad odor is a characteristic of the park. The sewer treatment plant is next to the park down by River Avenue. The smell at this end of the park is very apparent as you walk on the boardwalk toward the treatment plant due to the wind constantly blowing the stench toward the park.

Otherwise, the park has many strong points. The park is only half completed and the second stage will provide active recreation such as canoe rentals and tennis courts. An amphitheater is also planned, although it could be placed right next to the sewer plant.

Next time you walk down to the Pizza Hut, be sure to check out the Window on the Waterfront Park. Grab a friend, burn off the calories from your pizza and get to know a Holland landmark.

Compilation album traces growth

by Bill Meengs

For more than 10 years the album has been a force in the music industry. The compilation album traces growth, and the band members have been able to showcase their individual talents and the collaboration of the band as a whole.

Student Art Show begins

by Jessica Smith

The annual Student Art Show is the highlight of the fall semester. Students from all over the university are encouraged to participate, showcasing their talents in a variety of mediums. The show is a great way to give students a platform to exhibit their work and gain recognition for their efforts.

Deepest Gets New Works

Students Richard Bouwens ('94) and Wesley White ('94) get a final look at the "Days of the Dead" display which has been replaced by the Student Juried Art Show. Photo by Rich Blair

The actual works chosen for display depend entirely on the discretion of the jurors, who are chosen anew by the Art Department each year. Some jurors will try to fill in everything possible, while others, according to Jacqueline Carey, head secretary of the Art Department Office, can be very stringent.

The show includes new works, showcasing the diversity of student talent. The students are encouraged to explore and experiment with different mediums, pushing the boundaries of what they can create.

Arts

The deadline for entries is 12 p.m. on Thursday, December 6, in the DeFree Art Gallery. Entry forms, which can be picked up in the Art Department Office, must be attached to all artworks. The maximum number of entries any one person can submit is five. There is no size limit for individual works, but prints, drawings, paintings, and photos must be matted and ready to hang, and sculptures should come with "clear, simple instructions for installation (if necessary)."

The exhibit will be open December 8 through 14, and admission is free. Gallery hours are as follows: Saturday 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., Sunday 1 p.m. to 9 p.m., and Monday through Friday 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Final decisions concerning the display will be made by December 6, and Professor Adley will publicly discuss those decisions at 4 p.m. that afternoon.

Bank underwrites 'Nutcracker' production

"HOPE" - "The Nutcracker: A Play," the Hope College Christmas production, is being underwritten in part by a major gift from FMB-First Michigan Bank of Zeeland.

Glenn Wyngarden, bank president, and Jan Nienhuis, executive vice-president, presented the gift recently to Mary Schakel, producing director of Hope Summer Repertory Theatre.

"FMB-First Michigan Bank is proud to be a part of a family-oriented holiday production like 'The Nutcracker: A Play,'" Nienhuis said. "We believe our contribution will help provide an enriching, enjoyable experience for the West Michigan community."

FMB plans to give tickets to the Greater Holland United Way for distribution to families who would not otherwise be able to attend the Christmas production, which will run Friday, Dec. 7 through Saturday, Dec. 22 in the DeVitt Center on the Hope College campus. Pat Grace, executive director of the Greater Holland United Way, said that tickets would be distributed through several different United Way agencies.

"The best tanka of those chosen. The contents are an unforget- table experience appealing to all the senses by originality of choice of images and the rhythm of the English." A second judge, Atsuo Nakagawa, said of Ralph's second selected poem that the "content and sentiment are just those of the tanka, and its sound effect is excellent."

Ralph's interest in Japanese-inspired poetry developed as a result of his study of Asian theatre during a sabbatical leave at the University of Hawaii in 1982, and on a subsequent trip to Japan on a Hope College research grant in the summer of 1985.

In addition to tanka, Ralph has published haiku, senmyu, haibun and renga. His haiku have won awards from Japan's Modern Haiku Association in its 1987 International Haiku Contest, the Pennsylvania Poetry Society, the American Association of Haikuists and "Dragonfly" magazine.

Ralph has been a member of the Hope faculty since 1966. He earned his bachelor's degree from Stanford University, a master's of divinity degree from Union Theological Seminary, a master's of arts degree from Northwestern University and his doctorate from Michigan State University.

For more college freshmen, the end of the fall semester in the first experience they will have with book buy-back at the bookstore. How students can experience some of the book's end-of-semester by that the store books that books are being used the following semester at Hope at 50% of the purchase price. The quantity bought are sometimes limited by projected class enrollments and the number of books the store already has in stock.

The second buy is done for Follett Book Co. of Chicago and the wholesale prices. In general, these prices range between 90% and 95% of the current selling price. The bookstore does not encourage students to sell books in this manner unless there seem to be no alternative that the book will be used again at Hope.

The second buy is for students to recover some of the money they have spent for course books that do not buy-back at the bookstore. This process recycles books from those wishing to sell to those wishing to buy and allows the bookstore to offer used books as well as new ones. Over half the titles used at Hope are reused at some other time, but with new editions, changing titles and prices between the times a course is offered, students can more likely expect to sell back about 25% of their books at the end of the term.

Because something better has become available. The book is not longer needed the book but it may be bought for the used book company.

There is never a guarantee that textbooks purchased by students will be used again by any instructor anywhere in the country. Students should not buy books with the expectation of reselling every one that happens in very few cases. The real value of a book is obtained by studying it carefully and it can be resold or not needed then that is as extra bonus.

Professor wins Japanese poetry competition

"HOPE" - George Ralph, professor of theatre at Hope College, has been awarded Second Prize in the Second International English Tanka Contest sponsored by the Poetry Society of Japan.

An additional tanka by Ralph was included as one of five "Other Outstanding Tanka Selected from Contest Entries." Both poems appear in the Autumn, 1990, issue of "Poetry Nippon," published in Japan.

Tanka, one of two types of classical Japanese court poetry known as "waka," is perhaps the oldest form of poetry still practiced in the world.

Neal Henry Lawrence, one of four judges of the contest, cites Ralph's prize-wining poem as "the best tanka of those chosen.

The contents are an unforgettable experience appealing to all the senses by originality of choice of images and the rhythm of the English."
Alumni Poets contribute to collection

(HOPE) — Hope College alumni are at the heart of a “A While Longer Before the Cold,” the book produced by poet Jack Ridl, professor of English, during a sabbatical in the spring of 1989.

The book, an anthology, is a collection of poetry written by Ridl’s former poetry students. The anthology was printed by the college, and is available at the Hope-Geneva Bookstore on the ground level of DeWitt Center for $7.95.

Like the authors who participated in the project, according to Ridl, the poems are widely ranged. “These poems roam our experiences sensitively, intelligently, bravely,” Ridl said in the book’s editor’s note. “The range is exciting, the variety a challenge to any ideologue, the chorus heartening, provocative, transcendent, affirming.”

Ridl explained that one great challenge posed by the project was reaching his former students, each of whom was invited to contribute to the book. He found their response heartening. Of the 34 authors who participated, many contributed multiple works. “Discovering that these voices have continued to sing was a great encouragement,” he wrote in the editor’s note. “It’s been said over and over, but still rings true: One of the great accomplishments after one leaves the stimulation (for good or ill) of one’s schooling, is to continue one’s art.”

Just doing it at all is a remarkable achievement,” Ridl said. “Composing a poem not in the relative leisure of an all-nighter because it’s due the next day but rather under the fiercely ironic pressure of no assignment and in the midst of the bombardment of daily life, one often discovers a new and richer respect for anyone able to do such a thing.”

The authors’ graduation years range from 1962 to 1988. The collection’s title is taken from one of its poems: “Home Again,” by Susan VanOomeren, a 1985 graduate.

Ridl has been a member of the Hope faculty since 1971. He earned both his bachelor’s degree and master’s degree from Westminster College.
Danger of synthetic floor debatable

by Kris Olenik
assistant news editor

There has been some debate over the injury problems on the Dow floor. Some say they feel the floor increases the chances of some injuries that wouldn't occur as often on a wood floor. Others argue that the floor isn't the problem and there's no conclusive data that says it is. Dr. Roger Nemeth, professor of sociology, is considering doing a study of the floor in order to find some more conclusive data on the effects of the floor.

The question of the Dow floor causing injuries has come to the fore primarily because of problems the women's basketball team has experienced. There have been several knee injuries over the past few years that have taken place on the floor. The most recent injured knee was that of Nicole Mayer '94 who hurt herself at practice early in the season. The synthetic floor seems to be a harder surface than wood and stickier as well.

Nemeth said he had begun to gather some data from Rich Ray, the head athletic trainer and had also heard from coach Sue Wise and Coach Glenn Van Wieren. He said "Both coaches feel that the floor is hard on players. Though the varsity team normally practice at the Civic Center, they occasionally have to practice at the Dow and the men's junior-varsity team is there more often."

"Both coaches feel that the floor is hard on players," Dr. Roger Nemeth

Since the women practice there everyday Nemeth speculates that there may be some cumulative effect from the continued stress. This will be difficult to measure controlling for other variables. Finding the present data limited and inconclusive Nemeth is interested in finding more data which compare injury rates on synthetic versus wood floors.

Using the data from the NCAA Surveillance System, Ray put together some statistics comparing women's basketball injury rates for Hope, Division III, the Midwest and the nation. The data are only available for the 1986-87 and 1989-90 years and show the number of injuries per 1000 athlete exposures (15 basketball players who participate in 2 practices equal 36 athlete exposures).

Some of the most telling statistics show that: Hope players have a higher injury rate in practices for both years, they had a higher injury rate in games the first year but it dropped and was similar to other rates in the second year, and they have a higher overall injury rate in both years.

Strangely enough, though the injury rate is higher than others on both synthetic andwood floors, it is highest on wood floors.

This data shows no conclusive evidence that the synthetic floor is causing more injuries. Nemeth and Ray both agree that more data is needed to come to any conclusions. Ray said, "There is no good, hard evidence that players are more at risk on that (Dow) floor than they are on a wood floor."

He went on to say that injuries sometimes run in cycles. There will be no injuries for a while and then there will be a streak of them. "Prior to a few years ago we didn't have any knee injuries. It would be erroneous to look at the bench and say it's all of the injuries because of the floor," Ray said. Other factors such as prior knee problems and injuries that take place elsewhere also contribute.

Nemeth pointed out that there are two realities in this situation, the objective and perceptive. The objective reality is that there are some reasons apart from the floor for the seemingly high incidence of injuries on the women's basketball team and data on the floor is inconclusive.

"The perceptive reality is that it's more important," Nemeth said, "because there seems to be a general consensus that the floor puts more stress on the players among those who use the floor."

Coach Wise has been pushing for a wood floor for this reason and others. A committee has formed in support of it and they have presented the issue to President Jacobsen who is taking it all under consideration.

Wise would rather see her players on a wood floor but she and the team realize that getting keyed up about it won't help anything, so they try to keep their minds on playing and take things as they come. As far as she knows, the floor has not been a deterrent to recruiting.

Senior co-captain, Deb Hoffman, transferred from the University of Nebraska, and a wood floor, last year. Comparing the floors Hoffman said, "Yes, you can tell the difference. You just feel more sore after less amount of practice time on (a synthetic floor) than you would on a wood floor."

The players have complained about it, according to Hoffmann, but they've had to learn to accept it. But they wonder when its going to happen next and to who.

According to Wise it would cost $150,000 to put in a wood floor over the present floor in the Dow. The addition would take 10-12 weeks which would incur more cost to Hope while the Dow was not in use.

There is no good, hard evidence that players are more at risk on that (Dow) floor than they are on a wood floor.

--Rich Ray

An air pocket between the floors would provide more cushioning and a cover would have to be put if the floor was still going to be used for other indoor practices like baseball and softball.

At this point the women can't practice in the Civic Center, though they do have several games there, because of time constraints. Holland Christian and recreation leagues use the Center along with Hope's men's team so there aren't open times to fit the women in regularly.

Calvin takes men's volleyball at Dow

by Rochelle Anderson
sports editor

The men's volleyball club hosted their third annual volleyball tournament last Saturday at the Dow Center with seven teams participating. Calvin won the tournament. The top three schools were Calvin, Hope and Michigan State University. Each school was given 1 point. The top two schools at the Civic Center, Grand Valley State University and Hope splitting three teams into two squads. One school that played was Calvin and Grand Valley. Calvin was given 3 points. Michigan State was given 2, and Hope was given 1 point. The tournament was open to all players.

Kelley Phillips '91, the student coach of Hope's team, said, "We have some people who are just feeling their way through." What we have had so far is a lot of fun. We have some people who are just feeling their way through.

Each team puts in performances at their own level and the top three from each pool went to the playoffs with the number one teams taking a buy for the first round.

better at different things so we look at the team we are going to play to see what we are going to need and play those people who are needed for each game.”

MacIntyre, who is captain, organized the day with Phillips. The day started at nine in the morning and was not finished 12 hours later. The length was due to the amount of teams playing and not lack of organization because the day ran very smoothly. MacIntyre said about the number of teams there. “This is good. Eight is just a little too small. This was nice because the way we set it up over half the teams could make it to the championship round.”

Hope’s team had its strong points and its not so strong points. They were much more powerful this year than in previous years. This could be due to several factors. “It’s due to the fact that this is the third year the guys have been playing volleyball,” said MacIntyre. “We’ve all been together during that time and with Mike Zoetewey ‘92 and Kenichi Kiriyama ‘94, who are transfers to Hope, they fill out what we were missing last year.”

“The team has worked a lot on their passing,” said Phillips. “You can’t run a play without their passing.” Another factor was the three new players to Hope. Zoetewey came from California and has had previous experience in high school. Kiriyama is a transfer from Japan who is a powerful hitter, and Doug Swanson ‘94.

The 15-0 defeat by the CMU B team left the Hope netters stunned. “We didn’t get the guys stretching early enough,” said MacIntyre. “And some of us had just been eating food because there was no lunch break.”

Phillips added, “That was partly my fault. I told them just because they were a B team not to play down to them, but I still gave them the idea that the team was below us. We had to come out and play them just like it was Calvin.”

“Another big factor was probably the Calvin match” said MacIntyre. “We played so hard in both games. When you play for and hour and a half for two games, it’s going to take a lot out of you.”

Hope lost to Calvin in both games 15-10 15-13. The team played strong in some games and fell into lulls in others. “We play emotionally,” said MacIntyre. “When we’re up I really don’t think there are any schools our size that can beat us.”

“We get a couple of bad passes and the team gets down. That’s what happened to us in the second Calvin game,” said MacIntyre.

“Actually, I think we could have beaten anybody there today,” said MacIntyre. “But I think in one way or another there has always been a streak against Calvin and in the three years I’ve been here we’ve always lost.”

Hope’s A team defeated GVSU in both of their games and came back to avenge the shut out by CMU to win the second game giving Hope a 3-5 record. The air became tense when Hope and CMU counted points to decide who would go to the playoffs. Luckily for Hope, even with the shut out against them, Hope advanced to the championship round.

TANYA AND CHRISTI -- It's all yours!!

DOLL TOWNIE -- (The man without a mustache.) Let us know what that liberal arts degree does for you. 3:1 says you're unemployed and working at the lumberyard in June. Care to wager? But don't fret, Belt will be here (at least until they get going on that new dorm).

JEFF SCHANZE -- Did you get Dave's present? Good luck on your exams! Can't wait till break to see you again! Love you babe-- Christa

CARLA-- Good luck in your game! Keep your hands up and think before you shoot! You CAN do it! Love ya!

HEY YOU! Quit picking your nose and hit the books!!! Good luck studying the next two weeks and on exams! Also, have a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year! Love, Your Secret Sigma Santa Happy Chanukah!

POLITICAL SCIENCE Students: Slaves -- It's finally over! That darn book that we've been working on for 10 years is finally out of here. Or is it just beginning? Rumor has it that we start the second edition over Christmas Break.

THE SIGMA SIGMA sorority would like to thank the Cosmos for a fun time at Red and Green!!

Xmas -- will you be there fun on Thursday. Have a happy 21st birthday!

TO CATHY and Lance, thanks again, you made my year. Let's get tilted some time

ANCHOR STAFF - Great job -- you year. You did a tough job and you did it well. Keep it up for Beth

THANKS for all the columns over the years Jim-A Cleveland Fan.

To our favorite maintenance man, Have a wonderful 21st!!

JOE -- Have you forgotten about Freddy?

COCAINE -- What'd you do to your hair? Have fun in Philly. Can I have your car????

JDM -- Even though I've been giving you a lot of grief, I completely respect your decision. (In fact, I'm going to miss you more than you think.) Don't think you're going to get out of layout through 1986 HONDA Civic Hatchback -- nicely optioned, 27,000 miles, mint condition, excellent gas mileage (40 mpg), interior-exterior rustproof package, call 396-1069.

HOEK -- THANKS for the support. Good luck on your management project! Only seven days of stress are left! Your admirer.

BOYD BOYS -- Hope you survive the VCR! I'll be in Philly. COCO.

ROOMMATE WANTED -- North side of Holland. Call 396-1099.

I MISS you Kate and Rene already. Have a great break and behave yourselves next semester. B.T.

COCO, WE'RE going to miss you, your shoes, your car, your haircut, your chair, your letters, your ads, your pizza, your hustle, your "Tonight's the Night," your "Jon, you didn't!" and of course your four-year plan. By the way we have your room! Your loving pregnant housemate.

IS BETH Pechta Afraid of Santa? Many people including Santa were very disappointed that Beth did not sit on Santa's lap. Will Beth get coal in her stocking?

HOW MANY U of M students does it take to screw in a light bulb?

ONE. BUT the world revolves around him/her.

DONT FORGET: Alpha Phi Omega Christmas Rush Party. Tonight 8:00 p.m. Kollen Basemant. All are welcome.

LOVE'S WHAT we'll remember. Kiss today goodbye and point me toward tomorrow. We did what we had to do. Won't forget, can't forget what I did for love. K.O.

-- Say something sarcastic for us in D.C. And come back and run this boat for them next year. You did a good job and we'll miss you, seriously (well, maybe we'll miss you sardonically) -- Antoin Lefebber BOBO AND Wad -- Remember Eastern Market metro, they straight ahead one block for free pizza and cheap drinks. (You'll have to find the cheap women on your own.) Scooter.

Congratulations to Santa Claus Tom Boyer who somehow managed to cast 150 votes for himself. (P.S. There's a message in your box from a Mayor Daley of Chicago.)

NIGEL AND Bobo--have fun in D.C. Say hi and a few other choice necessities to George for me. Antoin Lefebber (alias John McNamara).

Happy Birthday Sak-- Have a good 22nd B-day. By the way, for your present you can have my car. Cocaine

Sak -- P.S. Mom, Dad, Angee, Brenda & I want to know when you're getting married?

Sak -- P.S.S. About the car, I'm kidding. PSYCH!
