Lived Several Days with Broken Neck.

After having lived with a broken neck for more than a week G. J. C. De Vries of Graafschap died yesterday morning, aged 62 years. On June 27, he was seized by a dizzy spell while sitting in a buggy in front of his house and fell from the vehicle breaking his neck. It was one of the most peculiar cases on record that he continued to live for several days, after the accident. Deceased is survived by a wife and two children, Joseph and Mrs. Dr. Breuker both of Graafschap. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon, Rev. Hines of Graafschap, Rev. Van Vessem of Graafschap and Rev. Roberts of Nykerk officiating.

Such highly interesting matters as the laying of sidewalks, passing on bills and other matters equally important but equally lacking in features took up the lion's share of the council meeting last evening. No one was sorry however that no spectacular issues were put on the carpet as not even the big electric fan could keep down the temperature to a fairly comfortable degree.

The oft agitated smoke nuisance petition that had promised to furnish some excitement was disposed of quickly by referring it to the committee on ordinances. The Cappon & Bertsch Leather Co. and the Superior Ice Co. were named in the petition signed by forty people as the chief offenders. "Move the tannery," was one alderman's suggestion for disposing of the matter; but the others decided that it would be easier to refer it to the ordinance committee.

A lengthy petition signed by some 100 names was read asking for the establishment of a public bath house. It set forth that located as we are near a lake and a river there is constant danger of drownings of boys who go swimming in unprotected swimming holes. The necessity of a public swimming place was insisted upon and the one built in Belle Isle Park at Detroit was suggested as a model. The petition was referred to the Ways and Means committee.

The Geo. Rickman Sons Co., contractors for the city hall came in for a little unpleasant scrutiny at the hands of the council. When their bill came up Ald. Jellema pointed out that they were in the habit of neglecting to pay the bills the local firms held against them while they did take care of outside bills. Complaints had been made that the company was not treating the local people squarely in this respect, and so the council refused to allow their bill until the old accounts in the city were paid.

After a large volume of routine business the council went into committee of the whole to consider amendments to the city charter.

Amendments which it is proposed by the Common Council of the City of Holland, to recommend to the Governor of the State of Michigan, and for ratification by the electors of the City of Holland, at a special election to be held Sept. 6, 1910, to the Charter of the City of Holland.

Sixth. To amend section 17, of Title XXVII, to read as follows.

Sec. 17. Upon the confirmation of any special assessment, the amount thereof may be divided into not more than ten installments, one of which shall be collected each year, at such times as the council shall determine, with annual interest at a rate not exceeding six per cent.

OSSIFIED MAN IN GRIP OF A MONSTER PYTHON

JAMES WOOD HAS A TERRIFYING EXPERIENCE WITH BIG SNAKE IN A MUSEUM.

Chicago.—James Wood, an "ossified man," is near death at St. Luke's hospital, the result of a shock after a thrilling experience with a ten-foot black python. Five physicians, attracted by the study offered in the strange patient, are at his bedside.

A strange feeling of fear and horror came over "Ossified Jim," as he is known as he lay on a rude bed in a State street museum. It was after midnight and the place was in darkness.

The snake, which had been allowed to escape from its cage by careless attendants, had crawled about the room and finally worked its way to the bed on which lay the ossified man. The man's screams brought a policeman to the rescue just as the snake was about to wrap itself about the victim's neck. The man has been ossified in his limbs for years, both legs and arms being stiff and helpless. He was unable to fight off the reptile. He was literally dying from fright when rescued.

It is the shock from which he is now suffering.

"A death-like quiet settled over the deserted place," began "Jim," recalling the experience. "I was terror-stricken, for no apparent reason. I closed my eyes to shut out some imaginary terror. Then I reopened them almost immediately and raised my head. My eyes met the fixed gaze of the serpent.

"With wide-opened mouth, its tongue of fire, it crawled slowly over my lifeless legs, wrapping its body about me apparently ready to crush out my life. But I felt nothing only the spell of the serpent's eyes. I lay there hypnotized by the reptile. That pair of snake eyes that glistened in the darkness and held me in their power I shall never forget. I could no more shift my gaze than I could rescue myself from what appeared to be certain death.

"Surely I was dying I thought. I measured the distance the serpent must crawl till it would reach my face. It was less than four feet. It had lifted its tail from the floor then. Its next move, I thought, would be the beginning of the end. I imagined everything. I remembered every event of note in my career. Everything flashed through my brain with lightning rapidity.

"I saw strangers packing my body into a wooden box. Stamped on all sides was this address: 'Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C.' And the printed words: 'Handle with care!' I wondered if the scientists would welcome my body.

"I imagined they found more to study in my body than they did in that of Jonathan Bass, the ossified man before me. I saw them cover me over in the box, and the hammering on the lid told me they were making me a prisoner, while in reality I still lived. I cried out, and—well, a policeman broke in and rescued me. Pretty narrow escape? Oh! the snake is harmless, but I didn't know it then."

Wood is 50 years old, and his home is in Vinton, Iowa. Rheumatism, he thinks, caused him to become ossified. The joints grew together. He became helpless 12 years ago, his body being "dead" from just below the heart to his toes.

A New Evening Cloak.

Of the many Chantecler garments one of the most useful and least startling is an evening cloak that falls almost to hem of frock, with capelike revers and raglan sleeves.

The chief feature of the cloak is that it is reversible; it is made of two shades of fine faced cloth. It can be utilized with darker side out for motoring.

The circular deep revers are of the light tone when the dark side of coat is worn, and is turned, dark side out, for the light cloak. There is no trimming of any kind on most of these models, though some have an irregular border made of inch-wide detached strips of light cloth on dark, and vice versa.

These are cut about six inches long, with slanting ends, and are arranged in two rows, a strip on second row opposite space between strips on outer row.

Worse Every Year

Plenty of Holland Readers Have the Same Experience.

Don't neglect an aching back. It will get worse every year. Backache is really kidney ache. To cure the back you must cure the kidneys.

If you don't, other kidney ills follow—

Urinary troubles, diabetes, Bright's disease.

A Holland citizen tells how—the cure is easy.

William Van Dort, 25 E. Tenth St., Holland, Mich., says: "I suffered from kidney trouble and backache for over ten years. The kidney secretions were irregular and painful in passage and also contained sediment. My back was so weak and lame that I could hardly stoop or lift and if I caught cold, it always settled in my kidneys, causing me to suffer more acutely. I doctored a great deal, but never succeeded in finding relief until I procured a box of Doan's Kidney Pills at Doesburg's Drug Store. I was benefited in a short time and before long I was cured. I still take this remedy occasionally, when feeling tired or run down and relief always follows."

For sale by all dealers. Price 5 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Jocelyn saw John Steele draw himself back sharply just in time. She also fancied a new, ominous gleam in his eyes. His demeanor underwent an abrupt change. If Ronssdale's quickness was catlike the other's movements had now all the swiftness and grace of a panther.

"Hello!" Through the swishing of steel she heard again the man at her side exclaim, make some laughing remark. "Perhaps I'd better hedge!"

But even as he spoke, with a fiercer thrusting and parrying of blades, the end came. A sudden irresistible movement of John Steele's arm and the nobleman's blade clattered to the floor.

"Egad! I never saw anything prettier!" Sir Charles came forward quickly. "Met your match that time, Ronssdale."

The nobleman stooped for his foil. "That time, yes!" he drawled. Steele found himself walking with Jocelyn Wray toward the window.

Across the room a footman now approached Lord Ronssdale and extended a salver.

John Steele's glance flashed toward Ronssdale. The telegram, then, had been for—He saw an inscrutable smile cross the nobleman's face.

A door closed quietly as Lord Ronssdale went out.

The afternoon of that same day there arrived at the village of Strathorn from London a discreet looking little man who, descending at the Golden Lion, was shown to a private sitting room on the second story. In about an hour he was joined by Lord Ronssdale.

"Well!" he spoke quickly—"I fancy you have a little something to tell me, Mr. Gillett?"

"A little something!" The latter rubbed his hands. "More than a little! The special inquiry which your lordship mentioned just as he was leaving my office proved for a time most illusive."

"You mean the object of John Steele's visit to the continent?"

"Exactly. And, the object of that visit solved, I have now a matter of greatest importance to communicate, so important it could only be imparted by word of mouth." The police agent spoke hastily and moved nearer.

"Indeed! You have reached a conclusion, one that you sought to reject perhaps, but that wouldn't be discarded?"

Mr. Gillett looked at him earnestly. "You don't mean—it isn't possible that you knew all the while?"

"Let us start at the beginning."

"True, your lordship." Mr. Gillett swallowed. "As your lordship is aware, we were fortunate enough in the beginning to find out through our agent in Tasmania that John Steele came to that place in a little trading schooner, the Laura Deane of Portsmouth; that he had been rescued from a tiny uncharted reef, or isle, on Dec. 21, some three years before. The spot, by longitude and latitude, marks, through an odd coincidence, the place where the Lord Nelson met her fate."

"A coincidence truly," murmured the nobleman. "But at this stage in your reasoning you recalled that all on board were embarked in the ship's boats and reached civilization, except possibly—"

"A few of my charges between decks? A bad lot of ugly brutes. The story of John Steele's rescue," went on Mr. Gillett, "as told by himself, was well known in Tasmania. A lawyer by profession, he had been passenger on a merchant vessel, the Mary Vernon of Baltimore, United States. This vessel, like the Lord Nelson, had come to grief. All of those in John Steele's boat had perished except him. Some had gone mad through thirst and suffering. Others had killed their fellows in a frenzy. Being of superb physique, having been through much physical training—the listener stirred in his chair—"he managed to survive, to reach the little isle, where, according to his story, he remained almost a year."

"A year? Then he set foot in Tasmania about four years after the Lord Nelson went down," observed the nobleman, a curious glitter in his eyes. "Four years after," he repeated, accenting the last word.

"Such were the details gathered in Tasmania," answered the police agent. "Go on," said Lord Ronssdale.

"From the mate of the Laura Deane, the schooner that rescued him from the isle, and one of her crew whom I managed to locate at Plymouth, as I have informed your lordship by letter," answered Mr. Gillett. "These men now furnish lodgings to seamen and incidentally shanghai a few of them for dubious craft. Both of them, the mate and the sailor, recalled the man of fine bearing and education whom they found on the little isle, a sort of Greek statue, half clothed in rags, so to speak, who made his personality felt at once on these simple, ignorant fellows. At the spring on the little island the seamen filled their water butts. This kept them several days, mixing labor with skylarking, during which time one of them picked up something—a pouch marked with a name."

"Which was?"

Mr. Gillett leaned forward, spoke softly; Lord Ronssdale stared straight ahead. "Of course," he said; "of course!"

"This, I will confess, startled, puzzled me," continued the police agent. "I tried to explain it in a dozen different ways. Then it was that the line of special investigation helped. John Steele's outing to which you directed my attention was passed on the continent. After a good deal of pains we discovered that he visited a certain large building in Paris."

"This led to an inspection of the tenants. They proved of all sorts and kinds. The place was a beehive. Hundreds of people entered and left every day. At this time I happened on an item in a periodical about some remarkable work in a certain line by a high class medical specialist. Here is the paragraph."

Lord Ronssdale took the slip of paper the other handed him and briefly looked at it. "You visited this person?"

"Yes, as his office address was mentioned as being in the large building we were interested in. But at the moment I had no suspicion that John Steele's pilgrimage to Paris could have been for the purpose of consulting!"

"An eminent specialist in the line of removing birthmarks," read the nobleman, glancing at the slip of paper, "or other disfigurements?"

"One question, my lord. He is discerning—knows that you are?"

"Knows? Yes. He found that out one day in Hyde park."

"And yet he comes down here, dares to leave London, where at least his chances are better for—but why?"

"Why?" Lord Ronssdale's smile was not agreeable. "When does a man become illogical? When does he accept chances, however desperate?"

"When?" The police agent's tones expressed vague wonder. "Why, when there is a woman in the case," suddenly—"a woman or a girl?"

"Is there anything else you have to tell me?" asked Lord Ronssdale.

"Only one thing, and it may have no bearing on the case. Some one who has not been seen in these parts in years, the red headed son of the landlady where the Gerard murder occurred, has been back in London, and—Steele's looking for him, for what purpose I don't know." The nobleman moved quickly. "But he hasn't found him—yet. Apparently the fellow took alarm, knowing the police agent might want him, and vanished again."

Lord Ronssdale moistened his lips, then got up and walked back and forth.

"I have made my plans," he finally said. "And—I intend to act."

"Where?"

"Here, and at once."

CHAPTER XI. REVELATIONS.

NIGHT at Strathorn House. John Steele walked slowly on the broad stone balcony toward the ballroom. There he had stopped; then, stepping to the balustrade, he stood looking off. The night was warm. In the sky stars seemed trying to maintain their places between dark, floating clouds. The sound of music was wafted from within. John Steele listened. They were beginning once more to dance. He stepped toward the window and paused. His eyes seemed searching the throng. They found what they sought a slender, erect form, therown soft, white, like foam; a face animated, joyous. For an instant only, however, he saw the beautiful features; then as Jocelyn turned in the dance around her waist glimpsed a black band tipped by slender masculine fingers; above, a cynical countenance. Or was it all cynical now? A brief glance showed more than the habitual expression, a sedulousness, some passionate feeling. Lord Ronssdale's look seemed once more to say he held and claimed her—that she was his or soon would be.

The moments passed. A distant buzz replaced melody—the human murmur, the scraping of strings. From the forest came a faraway cry, the melancholy sound of some wood creature. He continued motionless, then suddenly wheeled swiftly.

"That is you, Mr. Steele?" A voice, young, gay, sounded near. Jocelyn Wray came toward him. From her shoulders floated a white scarf. "You have come out for the freshness of the garden? Although," she added, "you shouldn't altogether seclude yourself from the maddening crowd."

"No?"

Did she note the strangeness of the look she seemed to have surprised on his face? Her own glance grew on the instant slightly puzzled and showed a passing constraint. Then her manner became light again. "No. Especially as—You are leaving tomorrow, I believe?"

"Yes." He tried to speak in conventional tones, but his gaze swerved from the graceful figure with its dim, white lines that changed and fluttered in the faint breath of air, stealing so gently by them and away. "My time is almost up—the allotted period of my brief Elysium!" he half laughed. "I have enjoyed myself immensely—much more than I deserve."

"Have you?" She glanced at him. A flicker of light touched the strong face.

It seemed difficult for him to speak. Finally he said:

"I have neglected or forgotten the pleasure," with a slight laugh, "of congratulating you. Is that the word? Or Lord Ronssdale—he, I believe, is the one to be congratulated."

"Congratulated?" Her face had changed, grown colder. His hand grasped the stone balustrade, but he forced a smile to his lips. "I cannot imagine who has started—why you speak thus. Lord Ronssdale is an old friend of my uncle and mine, too, but that is all. You are mistaken."

"Mistaken?" The word broke from him quickly. The strained expression of his face gave way to another he could ill conceal.

"Goodby!" he said slowly. "I am leaving rather early in the morning. I shall not see you again."

"Goodby—at least until we meet in London," she ended lightly.

"That may not be."

"Why, you are not thinking of deserting your dingy metropolis?"

He did not answer.

Did she realize he was saying goodby to her for all time? She held her head higher, pressed her lips slightly closer; then she sought to withdraw her hand, but he, as hardly knowing what he did or yielding to sudden, irresistible temptation, clasped for an instant the slim fingers closer. They seemed to quiver in his.

John Steele breathed deeply. He continued to regard her, so fair, so beautiful. An instant and he bent. A breath or his lips swept the delicate white fingers; then he dropped them. Her hand swung back against the cold stone. On her breast something bright, an ornament, fluttered, became still. Behind a bird chirped. Her glance turned toward the ballroom.

Other voices, loud, merry, coming from one of the open French windows interrupted.

"Jocelyn!" they called to her. Faces looked out. "Jocelyn!"

"Yes!" She was walking rapidly from him now, a laugh, a little forced, on her lips.

John Steele moved slowly down the stone steps leading to the garden below. He could go, and she would never know she had honored by her friendship, had sheltered beneath her roof, one who—As he walked down the dimly lighted path somebody, a man, standing under the trees at one side, at that moment touched his arm. "I should like to speak with you, sir!" said a voice, and, turning with a quick jerk, Steele saw the familiar features of Gillett, the former police agent, behind him other men.

"What do you want?"

The Scotland Yard man coughed significantly. "Out here is a nice, quiet place for a word or so," he said in his blandest manner. "And if you will be so good—"

John Steele's reply was as emphatic as it was sudden. A laugh burst from his throat. With the quickness of thought he launched himself forward.

In a corridor on the second floor of Strathorn House the voice of Lord Ronssdale was heard. It was followed by that of Jocelyn Wray.

"Never fear! They'll get the fellow yet," my lord had said.

Jocelyn answered mechanically: "Although it was most bungling on their part to have permitted him to get away," Ronssdale went on, "I hope, however, this little unexpected episode won't disturb your rest." An instant the steely eyes seemed to contemplate her closer. "Many going away tomorrow?" he asked, as if to divert her thoughts from the exciting experience of the evening before leaving her.

"Only Captain Forsythe and—Mr. Steele."

As he noted the slightest limitation on her part speaking the last name? My lord's eyes fell; an odd expression appeared on his face.

As the door closed behind her young mistress a maid came quickly forward. "Did you learn anything more, Miss Jocelyn, if I may be so bold as to ask, from the police agent? Who the criminal was or?"

"The police agent only said he was an escaped convict, no ordinary one, who had escaped from London and was making for the sea. They got word he was at the village and followed him there, but he managed to elude them, and they traced him to Strathorn House park, where he had taken refuge. The police did not acquaint Sir Charles, Lord Ronssdale or any one with their purpose, thinking not to alarm us needlessly beforehand. And—I believe that is all."

A moment the woman waited. "I—shall I?"

The girl looked before her. Tiny flames from the grate heightened the sheen on her gown. They threw passing lights on the somewhat tired, proud face. "I shall not need you, Dobson," she said. "You may go. A moment." The woman, who had half turned, waited. Jocelyn's glance had lowered to the fire. In its reflection her slim, delicate fingers were rosy. She unclasped them and smoothed the broad absent with one hand. "One or two are leaving early tomorrow. You will see—you will give instructions that everything is provided for their comfort."

The maid responded and left the room. A faint shout from somewhere in the gardens, far off, aroused Jocelyn. The girl looked around, but immediately silence again reigned. She got up.

Again the sound. This time she placed it—the creaking of the giant branch of ivy that ran up and around her own balcony. The girl paused irresolutely, her hand on the heavy, ancient hanging. Leaning forward, she waited, but the noise stopped. She heard nothing more, told herself it was nothing and was about to move out again when her gaze was suddenly held by something that passed like a shadow—a man's arm—on the other side of the nearest window, between the modern French curtains, not quite drawn together. The window opened wider, noiselessly, but quickly. Then a hand, strong, shapely, pushed the curtains aside. The intruder acted as one certain of his ground, now drawing the window draperies quickly together behind him as if seeking to escape observation from any one below. He stepped out into the room.

Did the intruder hear a sound, a quick breath? His gaze swerved to the opposite end of the room, where it saw a living presence. For a moment they looked at each other. The man's face turned very pale; his hand touched the back of a chair; he steadied himself.

"I thought—to enter armory hall. Did not know your rooms were here," he managed to say in a low tone, "at this corner of Strathorn House."

She did not answer, so they stood silently, absurdly. The man had to speak first. He pulled himself together. The bad fortune that had dogged him so long, that he had fought against so hard, now found its culmination. It had cast him of all places at her feet. So be it. Well, destiny now could harm him little more.

"I had hoped you would never know, but the gods, it seems—he could even laugh—"have ordained otherwise. 'Fata obstant.'"

He stopped. A suggestion of pain crept into her expression. But the laugh returned to his lips, the luster to his eyes.

"A good many people have their pasts. Can you imagine what mine may have been?"

She seemed to stand in a hateful dream. Looking at him—the torn evening clothes, his face, pale, different. Listening to him—to what?

"A convict!" said the man. "Yes, that's what I was. Had been in jail—jails! And was sent out of the country years ago—transported. But time went by, and the convict thought he might safely come back—boldly, with impunity. The years and circumstances had altered him, wrought great changes. He felt compelled to return—why is of no moment—believed himself secure in so doing and was until chance led him out of his accustomed way—to new walks, new faces, where lay the danger, the ambush, into which he who thought himself strong like a weak fool walked or was led blindly."

The blue eyes bent like stars now on this man in her room standing before her with bold, mocking face as if his dark eyes read, understood every thought that passed through her brain. "You! Then it was you—John Steele—that they—"

"The convict they tried to arrest? Yes."

"You? I don't!"—Her voice was almost childlike.

"I will help you to understand!" An ashen shade came over his face.

The man paused. There was a strange gleam in the dark eyes that lingered on her. Its light was succeeded by another, a fiercer expression. For the first time she moved, shrank back slightly. "I'm afraid I used a few of them roughly," he said with look derisory. "There was no time for soft talk. It was cut and run—give 'leg ball' as the thieves say." Did he purposely relapse into coarser words to clinch home the whole damning, detestable truth?

"But it was a close call out there in the garden! They were before the convict in the woods. He must needs double back to the shadow of the house! At the bottom of a moat he looked up to a balcony overhead, small as Juliet's, though I swear he thought it led to armory hall, not here. Had he known the truth he would have stayed there first, and— But, as it was, he heard voices around the corner; afar, men approaching. The ivy at Strathorn House is almost as old as the house itself, the main branches larger than a man's arm. It was not difficult to get here, though I wish now—he dared smile bitterly—"they had come on me first."

She moved slowly out into the room. His face was half averted. He did not turn, although he must have known she was near. With his back toward her he gazed down at the soft, bright hues of the rug and on it a white thing, a tiny bit of lace, a handkerchief that some time before had fluttered to the floor and had been left lying there.

"But"—she spoke now—"you—you who seemed all that was—I can't believe—it is impossible, inconceivable!"

"I have told you the truth because"—the words broke from him—"I had to! Must I!—despite myself there was an accent of acutest pain in his voice—"repeat it?"

"Oh," she said, "it was infamous!" The word struck him like a whip and lashed his face to a dull red. The silence grew.

"I would not presume to dispute or to contradict any conclusion you may have reached." He spoke at length in a low, even voice. "I had not, as I said, intended this last, this most inexcusable intrusion. You have now only one course to pursue"—his gaze turned to the long silken bell rope on the wall—"and I promise not to resist. Well?" he said.

She had suddenly stopped. In the hall voices were heard approaching. He, too, caught them.

"That simplifies matters," he remarked.

"Jocelyn!" The voice was that of Sir Charles. "Are you there?" She did not answer. "Kindly unlock the door."

CHAPTER XII. AN ANSWER.

THE girl made no motion to obey, and the knocking was repeated. Mechanically she moved toward the threshold.

"Yes?" All the color had left her face. "What—what is it?"

"Don't mean to alarm you, my dear, but Mr. Gillett thinks the convict might be concealing himself somewhere in the house; indeed, that it is quite likely. So we are making a little tour of inspection."

"I," she seemed to catch her breath—"it is really quite unnecessary. I have been through them myself."

"Might have known that!" with an attempt at jocoseness. "But thought we would make sure. Good night, then!" They went.

The man in the room stood motionless now, his face like that of a statue save for the light and life of his eyes. "The other way would have been preferable," he said.

"What were you?"—she hesitated, emphasized over sharply the word—"transported?"

"What does it matter?"

"True! What did it matter to her? He had been in prisons before, by his own words."

"Your name, of course, is not John Steele? What was it?"

He looked at her—beyond, to a storm tossed ship, a golden haired child, her curls in disorder, moving with difficulty, yet clinging so steadfastly to a small cage! His name? It may be heard again the loud pounding and knocking; held her once more to his breast, felt the confiding, soft arms.

"What does it matter?" he repeated. She spoke mechanically. "When you found yourself recognized, why did you come here—to Strathorn House—incur the danger?"

"Why?" He still continued to look straight before him. "Because you were here?"

"I?" she trembled.

"Oh, you need not fear!" quickly. "You?" a bitter smile crossed his face. "And now!" his voice sounded harsh, tense, and he stepped toward the balcony.

His words, the abrupt action, what it portended, aroused her. "No, no!" The exclamation broke from her involuntarily. "There—there may be a safer way! Wait!" Bright spots of color now tinted her cheeks. She went quickly toward the door she had left. She listened, turned the key, then, opening the door, stepped hastily out into the hall.

Whatever her purpose, only the desire to act quickly, to have done with an intolerable situation, moved him. Once more he looked toward the window through which he had entered. First, however, before going, he thought himself of something—an answer to one of her questions. She should find the answer after he was gone. His fingers thrust themselves into a breast pocket. He took out a small object wrapped in velvet. An instant his eyes rested upon it; then, stooping, he picked up the bit of lace handkerchief from the floor and, laying the dark velvet against it, placed the two on the table.

Would she understand—the debt he had felt he owed her—long before tonight, that sense of obligation to the child who had reached out her hand in a different life, a different world? No. She had of course forgotten. Still, he would leave it, that talisman so precious, which he had cherished almost superstitiously.

When a few minutes later the girl hastily re-entered the room she carried on her arm a man's coat and hat. Her appearance was feverish, her eyes wide and shining.

"Your clothes are torn—would attract attention! These were on the rack. I don't know whose, but I stole them—stole them!"

She spoke quickly, with a little, hard note of self mockery. Her voice broke suddenly. She looked about her. The coat and hat slipped from her arm. She looked at the window. The curtain still moved as if a hand had but recently touched it. She stared at it incredulously. He had gone. He would have none of her assistance then; preferred— She listened, but caught only the rustling of the heavy silk.

She became aware of a throbbing in her head, a dull pain, and, mechanically seating herself near one of the tables, she put up her hand and started to draw the pins from her hair, but soon desisted. Again she began to think, more clearly this time, more poignantly, of all she had experienced, listened to, that night.

She, a Wray, sprung from a long line of proud, illustrious folk! And he? The breath of the roses outside was wafted upward. Her eyes, deep, self scoffing, rested without seeing on a small dark object on a handkerchief on the table. What was it to her if they took him—what, indeed? Her fingers played with the object, closed hard on it. Why should she care if he paid the penalty—he, a self confessed—

Something fell from the velvet covering in her hand. She was vaguely aware of it gleaming there on the cold white marble, a small disk—a gold coin. Then slowly she took it as if asking herself how it came there on her handkerchief, which, she dimly remembered, had been lying on the floor. Some one, of course, must have picked up the handkerchief, but no one had been in the room since she had noticed it except—

More closely she scrutinized it, the shining disk on her rosy palm. A King George gold piece! Above the monarch's face and head with its flowing locks appeared a tiny hole, as if some one had once worn it. Beneath, just discernible, was the date, 1702. She continued to regard it, then looked again at the bit of velvet near by. It had been wrapped in that carefully—for what reason. Like something more than what it seemed—a mere gold piece.

"1702." Why, even as she gazed at the cloth, felt it, did the figures seem to reiterate themselves in her brain? "1702." There could be nothing especially significant about the date. Yet even as she concluded thus by some introspective process she saw herself bending over, studying those figures on another occasion. Herself, and yet—

She was looking straight before her now. Suddenly she started and sprang up. "A King George gold piece!" Her hair, unbound, fell around her, below her waist. Her eyes, like sapphires, gazed out from a veritable shimmer of gold. "Date?" She paused. "Why, this belonged to me once as a child, and I!"

The blue eyes seemed searching—searching. Abruptly she found what she sought. "I gave it to the convict on the Lord Nelson." She almost whispered the words. "The brave, brave fellow who sacrificed his life for mine." Her warm fingers closed softly on the coin. She seemed wrapped in the picture thus recalled.

"Then how?" Her brows knitted; she swept the shining hair from her face. "If he were drowned, how could it have been left here by?"—Her eyes were dark now with excitement. "Him? Him?" she repeated. "Unless," her breast suddenly heaved, "he was not drowned, after all. He!"

Art in Holland

This city has just had an interesting spectacle of how a misdirected attempt at squemish morality can defeat its own ends. Many of the people of Holland have constantly opposed the organization of a theatre company for the purpose of giving the city the advantage of being included in some respectable theatrical circuit. The opposition, in so far as it is sincere (and, generally speaking, there is no reason to believe that it is not), is perfectly justifiable. If a man thinks that a theatre is going to work harm to the morals of this city it is his privilege to say so and to act accordingly.

Although we do not concede that the theatre is an institution that largely or chiefly exerts a bad influence, yet we are willing to grant that any theatre is liable to exert an unwholesome influence on some people who are looking for that kind of thing. The same thing could be said about institutions that are considered perfectly harmless. But there are other sides to this question. Looking at it from an artistic point of view, we believe that those who oppose a real theatre are doing the city a great harm.

The Shannon Brothers have just left the city after a two weeks' stay. They expected to stay only a week, but when their first license had expired they found it profitable to take out another. That means that a sufficiently large number of people went to see the shows, to make it pay for the traveling company to continue. Now, any one who has ever made a study of the drama knows to what type of play these shows belong. And even those who have made no study of it can tell from the posters that they were melo-drama, pure and simple—the lowest type of play, artistically considered. On one poster a woman was being choked to death by a professional villain, and another "bad man" was cutting a child's throat with a razor. Next to this was another poster showing how a band of villains tied a woman on a railroad track just before the approach of a train.

Now all this "rot" is not exactly immoral in the usual sense of that term. To an intelligent person it is simply disgusting. Still the News believes that many with a fair degree of intelligence went to one or more of these shows. We cannot believe that the large crowds that went are all lacking in intelligence. But the fact is that people are put to it for amusements and they go to low class theatricals for want of any better. Therefore the question is, is it better to give people shows that do not violate all artistic instincts by providing a regular theater, or compel them to feed on the drivel that the strolling players furnish? It is no answer at all to say that people can stay away from low vaudeville and melo-drama. The audiences that crowded the tents of Shannon Brothers give the lie to such a statement.

"Art is long" and can be attained only through infinite pains. If it is to be fully and radiantly the years of maturity it must surround youth as an atmosphere. A small city is limited in its opportunities of developing the artistic instincts of its youth, and for that reason we should do all we can to encourage theatricals that are worth while artistically, for by furnishing a substitute for trash we will be aiding morality as well as art.

Take a Swat at the Fly.

Our old time friend the fly, who has of late become our worst enemy, is in line for having his race exterminated if present indications may be taken as an accurate index to the future. The poor fly by his ill manners and uncleanness, has brought an untold amount of condemnation upon himself and he and his race must suffer the consequence of their own indiscretion. Were the fly to be a little more careful in his selection of a place of abode, and less persistent in his travels, his presence would be less obnoxious, but when you stop to think that the winged visitors who persist in sampling the food on your table probably just flew in from a visit to the nearby pigsty—or worse—unless you have a cast iron stomach you can not help but spleen against the "grub" upon which these bacteria carrying—germ gathering—microbe vending insects deposit typhoid fever bacilli and other equally dangerous.

The fly and mosquito, agents of typhoid and yellow fever respectively—thrive best in places of supreme filth. They carry germs of disease with them at all times and as a preventive and precaution, let us all in the interest of health do our part in the matter of extermination of these two useless insects.

Mr. Roosevelt's real position seems to be that of lookout for the Outlook.

Holland went dry without a fight Tuesday.

President Diaz, is 80 and has been re-elected for six years. No wonder Dr. Osler says he didn't say it.

However the street sprinkler man like the populist, is a middle of the roadster.

German dirigibles have been making flights over Holland. This may be significant, for it beats the Dutch.

The college professor who insists that the dangers of kissing have been immensely overrated is making a strong bid for popularity.

Col. Waterson advises Col. Roosevelt to rise above party and "proclaim himself chief justice of the high court of political arbitration." The Kentucky colonel forgets that the New York colonel has always found the Republican party a sufficient basis for political operations.

Political Notes

Mayor Ellis of Grand Rapids has announced his willingness to fill the position in congress now held by G. J. Diekema of Holland. If "Deacon" Ellis ever lands in the halls of congress he may be able to show some of the other members a trick or two in the bucket-shop game.—Allegan News.

Robert L. Johnson of South Bend was in the city last Monday and announced himself a candidate for a county commission of drains. Mr. Johnson is well qualified for this office and entitled to recognition by the republican party. He has always been a stalwart republican, served on township and county committees and spent a good deal of his own money attending county, state and congressional conventions; besides being a local power and doing good work for the party gratuitously.

Mayor Ellis of Grand Rapids, has started a postal card test to see if the people desire him to run as an insurgent candidate for congress in his district. This is a proper way to test the public pulse, if some one does not stuff the mail box.—Doughlas Record.

George E. Ellis of Grand Rapids is sending out many postal cards to Republican voters in this city to inquire whether they will support him in case he becomes a candidate for congress from the fifth district. "I am not satisfied with Aldrich, Cannon & Co. but I am satisfied with Diekema and believe him better equipped for the position than any other man in the district," is the way former Mayor Hoyt expresses his sentiment.—Grand Haven Tribune.

Returns from Trip.

Lansing, Mich., June 30.—Governor Warner and party which made a trip through the upper peninsula prison and the Minnesota penitentiary at Stillwater, is preparing to make the report, relative to the employment of convicts to the legislature.

Governor Warner states that Minnesota is about to erect an entirely new prison at a cost of several millions, including a new binder twine plant, much larger than the present one, which is said to furnish the state considerable revenue. Governor Warner was accompanied on the trip by the prison industries commission.

From the annual report of the state railroad commission some interesting figures can be found pertaining to the railroads of Michigan. This report shows that the state has 66 steam roads with 13,361 miles of track and 19 electric roads with a mileage of 1,268.9.

During the year there were 11 passengers killed, 210 injured, 79 employees killed and 1,224 injured.

Another feature of this report shows the number of men employed and the average daily wage of each different department paid for labor, officers, etc. The total shows an army of over 30,000 railroad men in Michigan.

The financial condition of the electric roads is shown in this report very completely; the number of employees on the electric lines is given as 7,153, including general officers, clerks, superintendents, etc.

During the year electric roads killed 43 persons and injured 375. Five passengers were killed and 222 injured; four employees were killed and 51 injured.

Fallen from Grace.

Fallen from grace after a long spell of the simple life, "Splan," the Blacksmith, has once more popped into the public eye. Eight months ago "Splan," or rather, Wm. Diemers took the alternative of a ninety days' stay in the Detroit House of Correction and a protracted stay outside of the city limits. He chose Zeeland as his habitation, doubtless thinking that the sage of that city Van Loo might instill some backbone into him. To further safeguard himself he chose the simple occupation of truck-farmer.

But even in this lurked dangers that no sage could guard against. Having accumulated a goodly share of loose change for the supply of cabbages and radishes he brought to town, he proceeded to celebrate, according to Officer Sam Leonard, who made the arrest. "Splan" found his way into the city lock-up on a drunk charge and on Friday morning he appeared before Justice Vander Meulen, and naturally pleaded "not guilty." Since Anton Seif was willing to furnish bail to the amount of $100.00 Justice Vander Meulen agreed to let him come up for trial July 13th. "Splan" sizes up the situation in debonaire fashion, doubtless thinking he is again on familiar ground.

Sane Fourth Gives Results

Dealers of fireworks in this city are finding out what the force of an idea can do. The sane fourth has been spreading over the country for some time but the dealers in fireworks did not think that it would affect Holland very much. Consequently, they put in a good supply of the noise producers, and expected to come out with a nice bunch of bills to the good.

But the sentiment has been growing here as elsewhere and the News had a share in voicing it. In an editorial last week we suggested a better way of celebrating the national holiday. Whether or not this had any effect, the day was celebrated in the new way.

As a result the dealers succeeded in disposing of only about half of their goods. Some of them did not get rid of that much and consequently are wondering what they will do with them. The fireworks cannot be returned to the manufacturers and will have to be turned out at greatly reduced rates.

All through the city the absence of the usual noise was very evident. People found other amusements at the resorts and on picnic trips to neighboring woods and in that way cut down the usual number of accidents to a minimum. Only a few minor accidents were reported.

Frans Bremer, aged 35 years, lost the thumb and forefinger of his left hand because he didn't let go of a giant firecracker soon enough after lighting the fuse. The premature explosion of a firecracker resulted in severe burns about the hands and arms of Russel Calsman, aged 10 years. Gerrit Terbeek, aged 12 years, shot a hole through his left forefinger with a wade from a toy pistol.

Boones Have Good String

Boone brothers, known all over the Grand, Great Western and Michigan circuits, are training their speedy bits of horseflesh on the half-mile track at the fair grounds in preparation for the summer campaign, and their stables this year comprise a much larger and better list than in any previous season. The horses are showing fine form and by the time the circuits are opened it is expected that the Boone brothers will figure largely in the monies. Last season horses were entered in 39 races, and only three times did they finish outside of the money.

In addition to their own state, the Boone brothers have received horses from various districts, which are showing promise of traveling in fast

The bride and groom took their places in the bay window which was beautifully decorated with bunting and ferns. Rev. Whitman conducted the services.

Doctor of Chiropractic

The science of adjusting by hand the subluxations (displacements) in the spinal column; commonly called the backbone, for the purpose of removing pressure from the nerves. The spinal column is the only place nerves pass between two hard or bony surfaces that are movable, therefore, practically the only place nerves can be impinged or the nerve restricted, and it matters not what part of the body or organ is affected, the cause is in the spinal column. I ask no questions, simply analyze the spine and I can tell you every place you are affected. Chiropractic is the only science that removes the cause of disease, and is done without pain, drugs or knife. I use nothing but my hands, and it takes but a fraction of a second, the whole object is accomplished when the nerve is released. Paralysis, deafness, loss of voice, cancer, catarrh, gall stones, overweight, rheumatism, appendicitis, neuralgia, neurasthenia, eye, ear, throat, lung, stomach, liver, kidney, bladder trouble, etc., all quickly and permanently disappear under Chiropractic adjustments properly given.

I do not treat, I remove the cause, nature cures.
Analysis and consultation free; let me tell you where you are affected by analyzing your spine.
Because it is new do not say "It is impossible," that is what they told Marconi.

WITHOUT A PARABLE HE SPOKE NOT.

July 10.

"The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."—John 6:63.

WITHOUT a parable spake he not unto the people." What the prophet had declared of him was true, "He shall open his mouth in parables and in dark sayings." It is important that we remember this. Many noble Christian people have inferred that our Lord's words were all simple, and that they presented the truth in a manner easily understood by everybody. Nothing is further from the truth. If our Lord's parables and dark sayings be taken as plain, literal statements of truth, they will lead to all kinds of errors and misapprehensions. Let us remember, therefore, the Apostle's declaration, "Without a parable spake he not unto the people."

There is absolutely nothing in the words of Jesus without a deep significance. How many have stumbled over our Lord's parables by taking them to be literal statements of facts! How absurd the conclusion drawn from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, for instance. How absurd to conclude that simply because a man was rich, fared sumptuously every day, and was garbed in fine linen, that he must suffer through all eternity. How equally absurd to interpret the poor man Lazarus, who lay at the rich man's gate, as representing, literally, poor and diseased beggars. How unreasonable to think that only such as have had an experience of this kind, with dogs to lick their sores, and hungering for the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table, would experience the joys of heaven, according to the Divine program. How foolish to think of Abraham's bosom, which could hold only two or three, as being the portion of blessing for only a handful of beggars.

Truly these various statements of the parable shine out in beauty and consistency as we get the true light upon them, and see their symbolic meaning, and application. We have already presented the true interpretation of this parable, and may do so again at some future time, for the benefit of new readers. We merely demonstrate now the fact that our Lord spoke to the people always in parables and dark sayings.

Note afresh the parable of the wheat and the tares, the gathering of the former into the garner and the burning of the latter. Neither represents literal experiences. In the parable the wheat is not literal wheat, the tares are not literal tares. The wheat symbolizes the inheritors of the Kingdom; the tares symbolize the offsprings of error—children of the wicked one. The gathering into the barn of safety symbolizes the glorification of the Church on the spirit plane, and precedes the shining forth of the sons of God in the glory of the Millennial Kingdom, for the blessing of the groaning creation; as the Apostle declares, "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God." The whole creation is waiting for the shining forth of the sons of God in the Kingdom, and their shining forth in truth and righteousness will scatter all the darkness of sin and error and awaken and revivify the world of mankind.

Eventually all the willingly obedient may enjoy the blessings of eternal life. On the other hand, the description of the burning of the tares, instead of referring to the literal burning, has, evidently, a symbolic significance—it means the destruction of the tare class—not their destruction as individuals, but as "tares," as imitations of the "wheat" class.

How glad we are to find the key to these symbolic statements—these parables. How glad we are that by the use of this key the parabolic figures become reasonable and beautiful. What a silver lining there is to the dark cloud of trouble which is now looming up before the world! How glad God's people must be to learn that just beyond the clouds and shadows comes the glorious Millennial day.

The parable of "the sheep and the goats," taken literally, has caused confusion to many. They think of the separation of the sheep and the goats as now in progress, failing to notice the Scriptural declaration that the parable shall find its application "when the Son of man shall come in his glory and all his holy angels (messengers) with him. Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another as the shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." We thus see that the application of the parable belongs to the Millennial age. All through that age the work of Christ and the Church, his Bride, seated with him upon his throne, will be a work of blessing to the world of mankind. And the manner in which those blessings will be received will demonstrate the sheep-like or goat-like character of every individual of the human family. The sheep-like will come to the right hand position of favor; the goat-like, to the left hand position of disfavor. The conclusion of the thousand-year Judgment day will bring the expression of the Lord's favor towards the sheep-like, rewarding them with eternal life, and the expression of his disfavor towards the goat-like, destroying them in the "second death." This is symbolically represented by the statement, "Depart ye cursed into the lasting fire (a figure of destruction) prepared for Satan and his messengers (followers)." The reward of the righteous will thus be everlasting life. The "everlasting punishment" of the unrighteous will be everlasting death, for "The wages of sin is death and the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6:23.

Evidently some wise and gracious purpose stands connected with the hiding of secreting at present of the Divine purpose from mankind in general. While the Scriptures declare it is a mark of special favor to the Lord's people that they are made acquainted with the Divine Purposes, yet nowhere do they declare that all those from whom God's plans are secreted are doomed to eternal torture, or to everlasting destruction. Thus our Lord Jesus prayed: "I thank thee, Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

Had the hiding of the Divine counsel from mankind signified eternal torture for those from whom it was hidden, there surely would have been no ground for thanking the heavenly Father for this act. We can thank him, however, that although many of the worldly wise are not privileged to know of his glorious plans, nevertheless those plans are sure. For the world to have known of the divine purposes in advance would doubtless have been injurious, because in their blindness they would have attempted to thwart these purposes and therefore would have gotten themselves into a worse condition of condemnation.

Our text shows that however dark and parabolic were our Lord's teachings, nevertheless, rightly understood, his message is one that is spiritually helpful and life-giving to those who can and do understand it. It is this quality of our Lord's message which makes the religion of the Bible different from that of all the heathen. It is a message of life as well as a message of holiness. It is a message of forgiveness as well as a message of condemnation. It is a message of love as well as a message of justice. His wonderful words of life are charming, beautiful, forceful. We may read them over year after year and we see still more beauty in them, still deeper significance, and that in proportion to our own growth in grace, our growth in knowledge, and in the spirit of our Master.

In addition to the changes in the personel of the faculty of Hope College, mentioned by us last week, it should also be stated that by the united efforts of the friends of the institution, under the lead of the Alumni, a strong pull will be made for the erection of a new hall or recitation building, at the cost of fifteen thousand dollars. The want of more and suitable room to meet the increased demands of the college during the past two or three years, the establishment of a Theological seminary, the well directed efforts that are being made in behalf of a more extended field of usefulness, and every other consideration involving the future prosperity of Hope College, demand that this be done and done immediately. The project originated with the Alumni at their late annual meeting and was by them laid before the Council of Hope College, which latter body appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. A. Visscher, G. J. Diekema, Rev. Wm. Moerdyk, and J. F. Zwemer, to whom the matter was referred with power to solicit subscriptions and receive donations.

The people of Holland have been wondering why the manager of Hotel Holland has appeared so mysterious the past week. Well, it's just because he had an English lord as a guest at the hotel and he thought it well not to precipitate a Boer-Briton argument by making his presence known. The guest was Lord Philips, of London, and he came to the city as the guest of the Misses Emma and Rose Fisher, of Chicago, who are now at Hotel Holland, where they will remain the greatest part of the summer. The Misses Fisher met Lord Philips during a trip to London last year. He is a clever conversationalist and is well posted upon the situation in South Africa.

The general store of Andrew Steketee, Eighth street and the jewelry store of Will Breyman, River street were burglarized last Sunday evening and about eight hundred dollars worth of property was stolen.

Kelley Sentiment Has Grown Wonderfully.

If there was any doubt concerning the candidate around whose efforts to secure the nomination for governor on the republican ticket the greatest interest was felt, that question was placed at rest when Patrick H. Kelley made his formal opening address at Mt. Pleasant last Wednesday night.

The morning paper in every portion of the state carried his utterances in full, the evening papers followed suit and gave the matter precedence over the day's news in almost every instance. The country papers issuing once a week made heroic efforts to reproduce at least a digest of the speech and from one end of the state to the other thousands upon thousands of citizens read the address the day after it was delivered.

No candidate has heretofore evoked one-half the interest Mr. Kelley did in his opening address and the attention given his words shows which way the undercurrent of public sentiment is running.

But better than the attention given his speech was the unanimous manner in which the daily papers commended him for it. Even the Detroit Free Press, which has been very bitter towards Governor Warner and which has even said some unkind things concerning Lieut. Governor Kellogg, openly declared that he had removed the only obstacles which might have blocked his path to the governors chair, and stated that there was no reason why he should not be given a trial. Out of all the papers in the state only two attacked Mr. Kelley. Both of these were papers in which Mr. Osborn is financially interested, the Sault Ste. Marie News and the Saginaw Courier-Herald.

Certainly this is a remarkable record for any man who is running for the high office of governor, and we doubt if it is not without precedent in Michigan politics. In a single hour the lieutenant governor swept away what his enemies had harped upon as the thing which would defeat him and stood boldly forth upon his own record, the history of which is so utterly blameless, that it would annoy his bitterest enemies if they undertook to besmirch it.

Day by day it is becoming more evident that Mr. Kelley is forging farther and farther ahead, but the one step which has taken him farthest forward was the one at Mt. Pleasant this week.

Saved at Deaths Door

The door of death seemed ready to open for Murray W. Ayers, of Transit Bridge N. Y., when his life was wonderfully saved. "I was in a dreadful condition," he writes, "my skin was almost yellow; eyes sunken; tongue coated; emaciated from losing 40 pounds, growing weaker daily. Virulent liver trouble pulling me down to death in spite of doctors. Then that matchless medicine Electric Bitters cured me. I regained the 40 pounds lost and now am well and strong." For all stomach, liver and kidney troubles they're supreme, 50c at H. R. Doesburg, Walsh Drug Co.

THEIR PAINS BURNED OUT

Tribesmen With "Tummy" Ache Has Friend Apply Hot Iron—Blood Letting Panacea for New Guinea Ills.

By JOHN FOSTER FRAZER.

Philadelphia.—Among the Watoro, a tribe living in the Uganda protectorate, burning is the panacea for all ills. Whether it be headache, stomach ache or ache in the big toe, they employ what I may describe as the red-hot poker cure.

A bar of iron is heated and then pressed hard against the place where the pain is supposed to be. It may not exactly remove the cause of the suffering, but the pain of the burn is so severe that the native becomes unconscious of its existence.

When a native has been eating something which does not agree with him, and he feels knots in his interior, he is quite convinced that he has a wriggling snake inside him. The power of the African natives to bear pain is extraordinary. They will have bones removed, feet amputated and incisions made in the flesh without uttering a single groan.

Sir Gerald Portal relates how, when marching through Uganda, he saw what he thought to be abominable cruelty being practised upon one of his camp followers. It was, however, nothing but an example of the African method of doctoring. The victim, it appeared, was suffering from severe pains in his interior, and in order to relieve him two of his comrades were dragging his legs and arms in different directions with all their might, while fastened round each ankle were cords, tightened up with a piece of stick till they cut right into the flesh. The man lay face downward on the ground, apparently past struggling, while another big black promenaded on his back, occasionally giving a stamp to emphasize the treatment. When asked what they were doing the grinning wretches replied with the single word "Tumbo," which means much the same in Uganda as "tummy" does with us, while the prostrate victim also murmured softly "Tumbo."

This stretching of limbs and rude kind of massage is the favorite native treatment for pains in that region and is apparently successful. In this case the man jumped up when the treatment was over, picked up his load and proceeded cheerfully on his way.

Cure Sick by Burning.

ment was over, picked up his load and proceeded cheerfully on his way.

Among the Mohammedan natives of Nigeria the mullah is medical practitioner as well as priest. As the Watoro, when unable to account for a disturbance in his inside, always ascribes it to a snake, so the mullah is always sure the indisposition is due to a worm. When a Nigerian has toothache, therefore, he knows that it is entirely due to a little worm which has made its nest in the tooth. If a man goes blind it is very likely because a worm has eaten the sight. A boil is regarded as a sort of worm hill.

The mullah, though he makes use of herbs and drugs on occasion, has a much simpler plan. The patient explains the awkward sensations inside; the mullah listens profoundly, produces a flat piece of wood or stone and inscribes upon it various cabalistic signs. The patient places the wood or bone against the troublesome region and goes away, and his faith is so great that, as a matter of fact, he is frequently cured.

If, however, the desired effect is not produced back he goes to the mullah, who probably makes him wash the lettering off the charm and drink the liquid. Should this fail then it is advisable to extract a cup of blood. Should the trouble not then be abated the red-hot poker is applied. After that he is fairly certain to be cured; but if he persists in proclaiming that the aches have not departed he is dismissed by the mullah—who has pocketed a fresh fee for each different treatment—with the information that he has offended Allah and will have to put up with his trouble by way of punishment.

PUTS BLAME ON FAMILY RULE

Writer in Eastern Periodical Severely Arraigns American Parents as Responsible for Evil.

It is manifest to the most careless observer that the public conscience of America is thoroughly aroused and that the American people are resolute in the determination to have a general "house-cleaning." This sentiment is confined to no section or state; it pervades the entire body politic from ocean to ocean, says the Washington Post.

If it shall result in governors who will rigidly execute the laws without fear or favor; judges who will dispense justice, with balance rightly adjusted, speedily and without delay; jurors who will do their duty, "blind to the offender and lynx-eyed to the deed," a new era will come to bless our land.

Our tribulation is all in the fault of the people themselves. Nowhere else in Christendom are found children with so little reverence for parental admonition and with so much contempt for parental authority as the average American family. It is a rare youth of seventeen who does not look on his daddy as an imbecile or a fool. This is the observation and the testimony of pretty nearly every foreign observer who has studied our civilization and our society. Go into any crowded street car and you will see a great calf of a boy sitting while a decrepit man or woman of three score years and ten is standing, painfully holding to a strap. It occurs constantly in this town, the capital of what we fondly say is the greatest of nations.

Let us take down Solomon and read: "He that spareth the rod hateth his son; but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes."

And remember chaos in the fatally makes anarchy in the state.

TOO MANY WASTE ABILITY

One of the Great Tragedies of Life is the Squandering of Possibilities.

Doing the lower when the higher is possible constitutes one of the greatest tragedies of human life. To squander money seems a wicked thing when we think of the good that might be done with it; but what about the wicked waste of ability, the deliberate throwing away of 50, 75, perhaps 90 per cent. of one's success possibility, just because he never trained himself to use it, to grasp it with such vigor and power that he can fling his life into his career with its maximum of effectiveness?

Most people take hold of life with the tips of their fingers. They never get hold of the life proposition with that grip and tenacity of purpose and vigor of determination which does things worth while. They just hang on the outskirts of things, playing upon the surface of their possibilities without getting down into the marrow of their being where efficiency and power dwell.—Success Magazine.

Trick of the Gas Man.

"Look out! It's a dummy turnon," telephoned the gas man to a fellow employee whose duty it is to go round and turn on the gas and inspect the meter for families that have just moved in or have had the gas shut off for non-payment of bills. He explained that the man who is sent to a house to shut off the gas because the bill hasn't been paid rarely tells the housewife what he is about to do. She wouldn't let him in. Instead he make a pretense of trying to find a leak. Once in the cellar he snaps a padlock on the valve and the trick is done. Then he leaves quickly. When the turnon man comes around after a settlement has been made he is likely to get at least a good tongue lashing, but he jerks his shoulders and points to his ears, pretending to be deaf.

"In either case," said the gas man, "there is no use in abusing him, and that is why we put each other wise when to act the dummy."

In the Old Frontier Days.

An army official's wife laughs gaily at what she is pleased to term the fastidiousness of some of her friends. "You should have been with me on the plains," she remarks. "I remember when my husband and I stopped for a time in a Texas frontier house, where several civil engineers were also boarding. The tea and coffee were served in cups without saucers. There was, in fact, only one spoon in the establishment, and that belonged to the sugar basin. From thence it would be removed to stir each cup's contents as they were prepared by the hostess and started down the long table. Sometimes it would be overlooked and lost. Then a search would be instituted. 'Where is—oh, Mrs. Blake, you have the spoon.' I would send it back to the tray and meal would proceed."

His Weakness.

"That woman over there," he mused at the party, "is interesting looking, but what age is she? She is pretty, too, but she seems to be of no definite age. She is neither old nor young, but she is interesting." "That's just the difference between us women and you men," said his companion. "If you are interesting, we don't care what your age is. We even don't care how bald you are, if you are interesting." "Don't!" he groaned, pressing both hands to his head to try and hide his baldness.

CROWD IN PANIC AS LION ATTACKS TRAINER

HUNDREDS WITNESS DESPERATE BATTLE BETWEEN MAN AND BEAST IN A CAGE.

New York.—A great rush to Coney marked the first Sunday following the official opening of the amusement city. It was estimated that there were 300,000 persons on the island in the early evening. About 800 of these received an alarming thrill, not on the program, when they went to an animal show.

Peter Taylor, a lion trainer, was just finishing his act, in which he handled four lions, a polar bear and a cinnamon bear. The finale is the mounting of the beasts upon a large pedestal and Taylor had two of the lions in their places and was leading the polar bear to its station, when Duchess, another lion, sprang at the bear.

She fell upon it and both beasts rolled on the floor of the cage, roaring with rage.

Taylor drew his revolver and fired two blank cartridges in the hope of frightening the lioness. Then he prodded her with the steel-pointed stick which all trainers carry.

This merely turned her attack upon him and she rushed him against the outer bars of the cage, while the crowd was on the verge of panic. Women screamed and fled.

The lioness sank her claws in the trainer's left arm, inflicting a deep wound, and she was holding him against the bars when Captain Bonavita and another trainer dashed into the cage and drove her back with heavy clubs.

Dr. Haverly was called and said that while Taylor's wound was not immediately dangerous it would be best to have it cauterized.

During the excitement the other animals held their positions without making sound or movement.

Half a hundred property owners have paid the penalty of having their city water supply cut off for disregarding the edict of the board of public works relative to the prescribed hours of sprinkling.

Three from Hope college will go to foreign mission fields this fall. They are Joseph R. Sizoo, Gerrit D. Pentsem and Herman Benskers. They will go respectively to India, Arabia and China.

The city has secured a large boiler from Will Van Anrooy and placed it at the Scott-Lagers dock where it will be used in filling the street sprinklers with water from the lake in order to save the city water during the summer.

Formal announcement has reached here of the engagement of Rev. John Van Es and Miss Dorothy Firman. Mr. Van Es has been engaged in mission work in India for the past seven years and will return home within a short time, when he will be married to Miss Firman, who is a resident of New York city.

B. W. Leonard of Grand Rapids a snake trainer at Jenison park, was severely bitten by an ugly reptile Friday. While he was attempting to pick up Kaizer Wilhelm one of the big king snakes, the reptile slipped through his fingers and struck three times before the trainer could drop him. The snake was promptly killed.

The Bay View Furniture company has let the contract for a large addition to its factory on Black lake and excavation already has been begun. The addition will be 80x100 feet, three stories high and will greatly enlarge the capacity of the plant, which has been handicapped for room. About forty additional men will be added to the pay role.

The large yacht Van Adis was in Saturday and Sunday after a lively fight with the high seas. The yacht was bound from Chicago to Macatawa park and when about six miles off shore lost her maps and could not proceed. A distress signal was hoisted and the life-saving crew in the surf boat went out and took off the passengers and crew. Later the ferry-boat Perry was secured and the yacht towed into the harbor.

The local postoffice force, including the postmaster himself, appeared Saturday in new khaki uniforms. They are not regulation clothes furnished by the government, but just pants and blouse made of khaki cloth, were purchased of a local dealer at nominal figure, having appealed to them as being practical and altogether just the thing for their needs, as aside from being serviceable, the goods are cool and neat appearing.—Allegan News.

The number of drownings and near drownings at Holland and the resorts is unusually large this season. Last Sunday with a high sea on several canoeists ventured out into the lake and a number of canoes were upset with almost fatal results in the case of four men. Two Grand Rapids men staying at Ottawa Beach were rescued by the life savers and resuscitated only after a half hour of hard work. Two others Carl Huester and Ed. Rie, both of Grand Rapids, went over about a quarter of a mile from shore and were also rescued by the life savers.

The Ottawa Beach Improvement association, which has been in operation for the past three years, plans merging with the old West Michigan Park association. The latter organization has been inactive for many years, but an order of the Kent Circuit court just issued has revived it. By the decision the Park association was held to have no legal control over the affair of the resort, and as the Improvement association acted merely on agreement, a merger was planned. The whole matter will be taken up at the third annual meeting of the Improvement association next Saturday evening at the Hotel Ottawa, and it is hoped that the tangled affairs of the resort management may be straightened out.

W. H. Titus, aged 39 years, of Oklahoma City, Okla., committed suicide last Friday night by jumping from the promenade deck of the steamer Holland as the vessel was near the middle of the lake. His friend, C. A. Hamlin, also of Oklahoma City, tried to prevent him from carrying out his plan of self destruction, but Titus broke away from Hamlin's grasp and dove over the rail. The cry of man overboard was at once raised and Captain Stewart ordered the boats lowered in an effort to rescue the drowning man, but nothing was seen of him. Titus had been suffering from nervous prostration, and although not demerited, it was thought best that some one accompany him on the visit to his mother and sister who are spending the summer at Macatawa.

E. O. Schwitters and James Mulder, students of Hope College, are roughing it this summer in Kansas. For the past few weeks they have been working in the harvest fields and leading the simple life.

L. Kleyn bought the house and lot of H. Baumgartel on Lincoln ave. and Charles McDaniel a house and lot of J. B. Mulder on E. 13th St. The deals were made by John Weersing.

A committee was appointed at the board of Trade meeting held Friday night to look up the matter of securing more help for local factories which are contemplating enlarging. A committee was also appointed to assist in securing options on sites for the postoffice building.

A degree of divorce, signed June 11, by Judge Gage has been granted in the case of Anna Bretz, of Saginaw vs Arthur H. Bretz of Vassar on the charge of extreme cruelty. Permanent alimony is given the former. Dr. Arthur H. Bretz of Tassar and Mrs. May Lewis, were married June 20, by Rev. J. Ambrose Dunkel, at the manse, 710 South Weadock avenue. Mrs. Lewis was formerly a Holland citizen.—Saginaw Herald.

The services in Hope church next Sunday are as follows: Preaching by the pastor, Rev. Edward Niles, Subjects: "A Test Case in Prayer," Matt. 15:21-28, in the morning; "Crowns Cast Away," Rev. 4:10, in the evening. The anthems for the day are as follows: "I waited for the Lord" (Hymns of Praise) by Mendelssohn; "Rock of Ages," by Dudley Buck; "Hallelujah Chorus" (Messiah) by Handel; "Is it Nothing to You?" (The Crucifixion), by Stainer.

Joe Fabiano, the Eight street Italian fruit dealer was one of a quartet of men arrested for cruelty to animals. He was urging on his horse with the butt end of his whip when Officer Sam Leonard arrested him. Brought before Justice Miles he paid a fine of $6.50. The other three men arrested were Henry Kwast, Gerrit Onk and Carl Das. They are charged with overdriving a horse belonging to Fred Stratton. They were arraigned before Justice Vander Meulen and will stand trial tomorrow afternoon.

At a citizens caucus to be held this evening nominations will be made for members of the school board to be elected later. The caucus will be held in the De Merrill building, 19 West Eighth street and the meeting will start promptly at 7:30 o'clock. The three men whose term expires are Dr. J. J. Mersen, C. M. McLean and Henry Vander Ploeg. There is considerable interest in the caucus since there will be double nominations and because of the fact that women can vote in this election. Last year Mrs. Post came near being chosen a member of the school board and it would not be at all surprising if a woman should be nominated at the caucus this evening. The board has made strong efforts to induce all voters to come out to the meeting.

Damson's well known local orchestra will furnish the music at the Hotel Macatawa this summer, their popularity being attested by the fact that this is their third engagement there. The orchestra is made up of George Damson, first violin; Claude Allger, piano; Perry Askins, traps; and Dan Markham, cornet. The first hop will be given tomorrow evening, and there will be dancing every evening except Sunday, when popular concerts will be given. At the Hotel Ottawa, the well known Menzer seven piece orchestra of Chicago has been re-engaged for the season, and their first hop will also be given tomorrow evening. Jenison park will have dancing afternoon and evening during the summer, and the big pavilion with Benson's 10 piece orchestra at Saugatuck will complete the quartet of popular resorts for those who are fond of dancing.

It is proposed to turn over the $100 that is still in the treasury of Holland Improvement Company, organized some years ago, to the Board of Trade, so that the money may be used to good advantage and practically for the same purpose for which it was first intended. The Improvement Company was organized long before the Board of Trade came into existence, and its purpose was to improve this city along all possible lines. In fact the organization was to carry on the same functions as the present Board of Trade only in a more limited way. But the newer body has displaced it, the amounts of $500.00 donated by each of fifty men having been used to good advantage. The $100 that is now lying idle in the treasury will find its way into the treasury of the Board of Trade within ten days unless an objection is made to Secretary C. Ver Schure of the Board.

For five hours Tuesday evening Holland was on the dry list with a vengeance. Not only were malt and spirituous liquors tabooed, but even pure stream that makes glad the heart of the teetotaler was not to be had for love or money. At 6:30 a valve stem in the valve cage broke at the water station, and although it was not a serious mishap it was 11:30 before the machinery had been put into running order again, and many went to bed thirsty. Various private pumps were pressed into service, but for all that the inconvenience was considerable. The rules recently passed in regard to sprinkling lawns are being generally observed and few complaints are brought in.

Former Sheriff Jesse G. Woodbury came home from the north woods yesterday to get cooled off for a day. The weather has been so hot that the former sheriff and his cruisers have been unable to work at all. While driving along the lake shore road in an automobile near Harbor Springs last week he aided in the rescue of an old man named Anderson and his son, who were forced to jump into the lake from a burning launch. As they came out into full view of Lake Michigan, the former sheriff was surprised to see a burning launch some distance out on the lake. The occupants were forced into the water and came ashore in a small boat after a thrilling experience, which all but used up the old man. The rescued ones were taken into the automobile and hurried to Harbor Springs.

What might have been a serious wreck, with considerable loss of life occurred on the Pere Marquette road within the city limits Saturday morning. The fact that the passenger coaches did not turn over when the train jumped the track is the only thing that saved the passengers in the day coaches. It was the passenger train due here at 9:20 a. m. and near Seventeenth street, while it was going at a good speed, the journal box of the baggage car broke, which caused the wreck. After ploughing along for some distance the baggage car turned over, but fortunately all the other cars remained erect. Only two men were injured, Baggage man F. C. Kemper of Benton Harbor, who received several bruises about the legs and body and Express Messenger Fred Balance, also of Benton Harbor, who received a scalp wound that required several stitches. It was nearly three o'clock in the afternoon before the track was cleared.

A Home Bird.

Although every section furnishes its eccentricities, coincidences and peculiar characteristics Holland township claims the unique distinction of having among its pioneer residents an aged woman who never has witnessed the hustle and bustle of city life, who never has ridden on a street car and has not entered a church or occupied a seat in any carriage or other vehicle for more than half a century.

Living within a quarter mile of the east limits of the city Mrs. Paul Berghuis, aged seventy-seven, has not crossed the boundary line between the city and township during all these years and outside of papers and pictures cannot form the least conception of how Holland has grown from a primeval forest to a beautiful city of 11,000 inhabitants.

Mrs. Berghuis, whose maiden name was Diekema and who is an aunt of Congressman Gerrit J. Diekema, came to America from the Netherlands in 1848. On May 12, 1851, she was married to Paul Berghuis, who came to America the same year, and the couple repaired to their present farm where they have resided for nearly sixty years.

Soon after their marriage Mrs. Berghuis became an invalid and was confined to her bed for nearly twenty-five years. Then as though by a miracle, the health of her youth returned. Notwithstanding this, however, the habit of staying home had become so fixed that since that time she never could make up her mind to take a walk or ride through the streets of the city. Tempting offers of automobile rides have been made repeatedly to show her the city's numerous parks and surrounding resorts, but these were all declined. Mr. and Mrs. Berghuis are among the most respected citizens of this community and their hospitable home frequently is visited by people of all classes who always find a hearty welcome. Mr. Berghuis has been compelled to abandon his farm work, owing to his advanced age of four score years, and is a familiar figure upon the streets.

The capacity of the gelatine plant on the north shore of Macatawa bay will be almost doubled by the erection of the addition to the structure, the contract for which has been let. The new part will be 80x116 feet, three stories in height and is due to be completed by September 15.
