A City Man's Fearful Attempt to Break up a Sitting Hen.

From the Danbury News.

The city man who goes into the country to spend the summer must make up his mind to learn something of the routine of rural life. A New York man who is spending the summer season with a family on Pine St., was asked by the lady of the house, if he would take a hen off the nest, as it wanted to set, and she didn't want it.

"Certainly," said he, and immediately started out to the barn where the hens were kept, to crush out the maternal prospects of this particular one. He went straight to the nest to lift her off, and reached out his hand for that purpose, but immediately drew it back again and tucked it under the other arm and squeezed it a little, while he drew up his lips as if about to whistle something. Then he stood up and stared at the hen, and she lifted up her head and stared at him, winking her eyes with singular velocity. "Get off, won't you?" said he, after a pause. She made no response. He drew out his hand and looked at a red spot on one of the knuckles, and then put the knuckle in his mouth to cool it, looking all the while at the hen, and wondering how on earth she moved so quickly. The longer he eyed her, the less inclined he felt to touch her, and finally he climbed up a post to a beam which ran over the nest, and working his way out on it till he got just over the hen, took off his hat and shook it at her, and advised her to get. But she only looked up at him, one eye at a time, and clucked ominously. He told her if she didn't leave, he would come down there and kick her through the barn, but immediately gave up this blood-thirsty design when he reflected that it was a dumb animal, and couldn't reason like a human being. Then he happened to think of his pants which were of white linen, and rubbed his hand on the beam to find it full of black dust, which led him to work his body around to look at the pants, and, while making this very natural move, he suddenly slipped, made a plunge to renew his hold, shrieked for help, slipped again, and then came down on top of the hen and nest, smashing them both to the floor, upset dust, feathers, hen noises and shrieks. When the family reached the barn, the unfortunate man looked something like a circus poster on legs, had got on his feet, and was turning around, and was rubbing his head in an abstracted manner, and every time he turned, an omelette in white linen base came to view, while the hen stood up in the farthest corner on one leg, with a look of mingled astonishment and reproach on her countenance. After five minutes of industrious application with a chip, the gentleman was escorted into the house, where his head was bathed with spirits, and his comfort generally attended to.

An exchange says, while Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Pawling were riding through Wooster street, Friday afternoon, they were stopped by a stranger with a book under his arm, who came up to the wagon and said he had called at the house, but did not find them at home, and took the liberty of addressing them now. He explained that he was canvassing for a neat little work, entitled "Helps for the Home Circle," being a collection of the thoughts of the best minds of the age, a work that was adapted to a larger circle of readers than any extant, and one which must necessarily improve the tone of domestic life, add to the refinement and intelligence of Society, and fill the hearts of all with a longing for the purer things of life—just then Mr. Pawling's horse stepped ahead, and dragged one wheel of the wagon right over the foot of the speaker. With a howl of agony the miserable man dropped to the ground, and then immediately sprang up again, taking the injured member up in both hands, and still howling dismally, hopped across to the sidewalk. Mr. Pawling waited a reasonable length of time, but seeing that the man showed no intention of resuming the topic, he drove on.

Strikes.

BY PROF. J. D. BUTLER.

LINCOLN, Nebraska, 1873.

Employees have a right to get for their labor as much as they can by lawful means. It is lawful for them to refuse to work, but not to stop others from working. No tyrant so bad as the petty tyrant. "A poor man that oppresseth the poor is a sweeping rain which leaveth no food." On the other hand, employers have a right to hire as low as they can.

Strikes, showing that laborers aspire to better their condition, are a good sign. They have often secured higher wages, or fewer hours of work. Yet they usually cost more than they come to. While they last, laborers must live on their own savings or those of their fellows. But these are small amounts compared with the wealth of capitalists with whom strikes bring them in collision. When the rooster contends with the horse in treading on toes, the result cannot be doubtful.

No set of workmen are so indispensable to their employers as they fancy themselves to be. How soon their places, if they quit them, are filled by others from other localities, nationalities, or the other sex. Twelve to fifteen thousand London carpenters are now "locked out."

If strikers persist in any unreasonable demand, they may lose employment altogether, by forcing capital to seek new investments where it has no need of them. They will kill the goose that lays their golden eggs. So long as a strike lasts, it stops earnings but not outlays; and thus it leaves the working class daily poorer.

A century ago, Europe was crazy for a balance of power. John Bull fought for it till—plus the National debt, and minus a million paupers—he was nicknamed John Bull-dog. Nor did the Continental fighters fare better. The end was:

"Lo! Europe balanced—neither side prevails; For nothing's left in either of the scales."

The longer strikes last, the more they tend to similar nullification.

The right to strike, then, is too much like the right to shear your hog—"great cry, little wool." After much squealing and struggling, there is little gain.

English farm-laborers are talking of strikes. But what can they get? Landlords now obtain but little more than two per cent. on the money in their estates. Can they lower rents? But tenants declare their profits small, and decreasing through competition with the produce of cheap land in America, which yearly reaches English markets, more easily and abundantly. Rather than pay higher wages, tenants will emigrate to Nebraska, where they can buy an acre in fee simple, for less than their present annual rent.

Not a few, both tenants and landlords, have already bettered their condition by passing from Great Britain to Greater Britain. More will. Nor is it surprising that associations of farm laborers, after struggles to sell their labor higher, have devoted their funds to assist emigration to reach the cheap lands of the West as the true way of carrying labor to its best market.

Such an emigration, whether from Old England or New, or any old State, if one has money enough to make a new start, is twice blessed. It makes laborers scarce, so that they can demand and command higher prices. It also gives him who goes abroad a chance to rise where no tall trees keep down the underbrush. Landing in Nebraska, the immigrant treads on a stepping stone to higher wages—to ownership of the soil, and to elbow room for his children, where the labor market is never glutted.

The best strike, then, is to strike for a region where good land is cheapest, where inhabitants are fewest, and where railroads, outrunning settlement, bring markets nearest. No wonder, then, 25,751 homesteaders, or pre-emptors have filed claims to Nebraska farms, and about 5,000 have bought of the Burlington and Missouri River railroad company, along their track, on ten years' credit, and six per cent. interest.

paying on contracts since 1872, nothing of the principal till the end of four years, and sometimes, by prompt improvement, getting 20 per cent. of the price of their land thrown off. Strike, then, for the great West. As the best throw of cards is to throw them away, so the best strike is for a home in the Missouri valley. Ho for Nebraska!

Noah's Real Name.

It is said that the Chinese declare that Noah's real name was Ah Boo, and that he resided in Pekin. Unfortunately Noah's family bible was lost in the flood, and we cannot ascertain what his real name was. His door-plate also seems to be missing, and he had a very careless way of neglecting to mark his shirts; so we are baffled in that direction. We have inquired at the library for a copy of the Pekin directory of that date, to see if Noah really figured on its pages; the only copy any of them had was out. For our part we do not believe that his name was Ah Boo, or that he resided at Pekin. These Chinamen really claim everything that is going, from gunpowder up to newspapers. If we give them any ground on the Noah business, the first thing we know, they will be out with the assertion that the ark was insured in the Pekin Mutual Company, and that Noah used to give the Pekin newspapers free tickets to go in and see the animals perform. The interests of Christianity require that we should believe the bible.

A recent Associated Press dispatch from Washington, says: Senator Thurman, in his speech, at Waverly, on the 3d inst., conveys a wrong impression in regard to Senator Morton on the salary bill. The printed journal of the Senate shows that when the bill increasing the salaries of Congressmen came back from the House, Senator Morton voted in favor of Edmunds' motion, to strike from the bill all relating to increasing the salaries of Senators, members and delegates. There was another motion by Mr. Edmunds, preceding the one just referred to, to strike out all except what related to the President. This involved a refusal to increase the number of salaries, which, by common consent, were too small, and upon this proposition, Mr. Morton voted no. But as soon as Mr. Edmunds followed this with the test proposition to strike out all authorizing any increase for Congressmen, Mr. Morton voted in favor of striking out.

Speaking of a charge that the Republicans were attempting to "revive dead issues," the Albany (N. Y.) Evening Journal says: "It is the Democracy, and not we, who are reviving them. When they proclaim themselves the same old party, they challenge a review of their record. When they declare that they have not changed, they tell us that their future must be judged by their past. It is they, not we, who provoke the discussion of war questions. Nothing short of madness itself, or such desperate straits as permitted no other alternative, could ever have led a party into so arrant a piece of effrontery, or so gross a blunder. The unpatriotic Democracy have been scourged and blistered for a dozen years, and when, after that experience, they present themselves in the same unchanged character, they must continue to receive undiminished stripes."

Brick Pomeroy, while making a speech in Texas was asked by a listener, "What has the Northern man done for Texas?" To which he replied, "Taken the weeds out of your fence corners, raised vegetables, planted fruit trees, built your largest and finest houses, improved your finest breeds of horses and cattle, erected nearly every machine shop and foundry and mill you have among you. They have minded their own business, and have not disturbed a large audience by foolish questions. They have striven by honest industry to keep out of the sheriff's hands, and thirty feet ahead of the tax collector."

Too true, Brick, and "better late than never." During the war you told the Southern people an entirely different story about Northern men.—Washington (D. C.) Chronicle.

Spicer's Meanness.

About the meanest little thing that has come under our notice for some time was perpetrated the other day by Spicer, at the drug store, upon two timid and reserved gentlemen. One of them, our friend P—, is following the legitimate, and we dare say lucrative, business of lightning rods, for the protection of his fellow men. With almost Christian fortitude he had argued the erection of these life-preserving rods—the only safe and reliable ones in use—upon the house of friend Spicer.

How vividly did he picture the horrors that are liable to present themselves to Spicer or any other man whose house does not wear rods—as he returns to his family after a thunder shower. Wife, child, all passed into eternity in an instant, and perchance, house burned down, and the heavy weight that would forever lay upon his heart, that he was the cause. For a few paltry dollars he had refused the protection and caused the death of a beloved wife and dear child. For the ninth time he sat down for a few hours to talk with the hard-hearted Spicer upon this subject, which at the time being was nearest his heart. Just as he had got fairly engaged, Spicer jumped up, ran to the door, and calling in a stranger, brought him forward and said:

"Mr. P—, allow me the pleasure of acquaint

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

The State Legislatures or the General Government must adopt some stringent measures to prevent the startling frequency of railroad disasters.

Accidents will happen in spite of the best regulated system to prevent them, but their occurrence will be rare and seldom chargeable to carelessness. Nearly every railroad accident which has been reported of late is directly traceable to the recklessness of the employees of the roads. This recklessness is encouraged by lax discipline, want of system, and proper regulation on the part of the companies themselves.

Where trains are run on single tracks the utmost vigilance should be required. All stations should be connected by telegraph, and the movement of trains should be governed by electricity. When a train reaches a station, a telegram should be sent to the next station ahead, and the train should be compelled to remain until an answer is received that the track is clear. The notification and answer would require but a few minutes.

Express trains running long distances should know by telegram from each station the exact condition of the road, and the locality and movement of trains.

A system of this character would beget discipline, and this would lead to accuracy, which would prevent accident. When a train has the right of track, before it leaves a station it should know, beyond the possibility of doubt, that the track, to its next stopping place, has no train upon it, either coming toward it or going from it. With this certainty, an accident by collision would be an impossibility.

Single tracks may be a necessity on some branch roads, but their construction should be thoroughly discouraged wherever possible, and their management at all times should be governed by the strictest regulations. A better system of time keeping should be adopted. Every station should have a reliable clock, and this should be regulated daily by the home office. At 12 o'clock daily, a signal should be sent along the whole line, and every clock should be set accordingly. Some roads have already adopted this system of telegraphic regulation of the time, but all roads should be compelled to practice it. Every conductor, engineer, or other subordinate officer who depends upon correct time, should be required to have a reliable watch, and, upon arrival at a station, both conductor and engineer should be required to compare their watches with the station clock, and if there is a difference in time, a telegram should be sent to the home office and a reply awaited to determine where the fault lies. If with the station, the clock should be at once inspected, replaced by a correct one, if wrong, and if right, the station agent should be held to a strict account for not regulating his clock at the proper time.

By this system exact time would be secured on the different roads, and the variation of a watch in the possession of an engineer or conductor could not be plead as an excuse for a smash up and loss of life.

In the employment of officials, from the highest to the lowest, none but first class men, according to their grades should be engaged. Especially is this necessary in regard to engineers and conductors. The lives of thousands of passengers are entrusted to their care, and depend upon their fidelity and correctness. They should be well paid, and should be required to observe the rules of the company to the letter. They should never hazard a life on a doubt. If a doubt exists as between danger and safety, the latter should always have the benefit of it.

Men given to the use of liquor should not be employed. We would not expect the signing of a pledge from the employees of a road, but we would not keep a man in a responsible position who made a daily practice of drinking liquor. A clear head and a love for whisky are seldom combined in the same individual.

The adoption of these or similar suggestions by the railroad companies, or their embodiment in some legislative enactment, would effectually prevent the repetition of the disasters which have shocked the public of late.

HON. W. D. FOSTER.

Wilder D. Foster is dead. A good man has passed away. The poor man has lost a dear friend, and the world has lost a man whose life and example made it better for having lived in it. The loss of such a man is more than ordinary, and particularly affects all who knew him. His life was his great gain; his death the people's great loss. Mr. Foster was fully identified with the growth and prosperity of Western Michigan, having moved to Grand Rapids in 1838. He commenced business in a small way, and gradually rose to fame and fortune. He was always foremost in every public work that had for its object the material prosperity of the city of which he was a citizen, or that would tend to reduce the sufferings of his fellow man; often called to fill positions of honor and trust by his friends, and never found wanting in those principles which characterized him as the "noblest work of God—an honest man."

Mr. Foster was born in Orange county, N. Y., on the 8th day of January, 1819, and was, therefore, 54 years of age. After serving as City Treasurer and Alderman, he was elected Mayor of Grand Rapids in 1854; was elected to the State Senate for 1855-6, and was again elected Mayor in 1865 and 1866. In 1871 he was elected to the Forty-second Congress, to fill the vacancy caused by the election of Hon. T. W. Ferry to the United States Senate, and was last fall re-elected to the Forty-third Congress, by the largest majority given to any Congressional candidate in the State. Mr. Foster was possessed of great energy, which, together with his purity of motive, and practical business experience, made him a very popular legislator, and of great value to his constituents. His skirts were clear of even the suspicion of dishonesty in any phase, and his death in the midst of an active and useful course will be widely mourned, and adjudged a public loss.

FINANCIAL.

The excitement in Wall street, New York, for the past few days has been the all-absorbing topic of conversation among all classes. Many of the most respectable firms have had to succumb to the fates, while others are holding out with the expectation of immediate relief from some source. As yet, we have seen no grounds for alarm at the West. The trouble, thus far, is confined wholly to the stock market, and only those firms have been affected who have burdened themselves with financial responsibility of railroad enterprises.

In no case do we hear that respectable commerce has been touched by this panic, and we are unable to see that any damage will occur to the West more than to suspend commercial transactions until the stockholders in Wall street can learn the extent of their losses, and properly adjust them.

The general aspect for trade in the West is still favorable. The crops are here; the East must have them, and the money will be forthcoming to pay for them. Money, for a time, will be tight; but as manufacturing is doing well without any unduly extended credit, the demand for produce will not be materially decreased. Hence, we infer that there need be no fears of a panic in the West.

On the whole, we think that Western securities will be more sought for by Eastern capitalists than formerly, and that the outlook for the future is not at all discouraging. Money will be more equally distributed throughout the country; railroads will be built only when and where needed; new routes of transportation will be stimulated; the consumer at the East, and the producer at the West, will form a continual link across the continent, which shall be the means of reducing the belation in Wall street, placing it in a legitimate channel, where the interests of the country require it.

A Trip to Saugatuck Without the "Boston Man."

Correspondence of the Holland City News.
MR. EDITOR, DEAR SIR:—Seeing by your paper a short time since, that "Esau" had been to Saugatuck, and being somewhat amused by the vivid description he gives of the journey, and his experiences after arriving in that interesting village, I concluded to make the journey myself.

Wishing to profit somewhat from his experience, I did not purchase a ticket "via corduroy road and express stage," but visited the livery barn of friend Boone, and secured the services of a fine pair of horses and a beautiful carriage. Next in order was a companion for the journey, for of course I did not wish to go alone. After a few moments deliberation, however, I came to the conclusion that the "Boston Man" was not exactly the companion for me; therefore, I succeeded, after a few mortifying refusals (it is, of course unnecessary to inform you that I do not consider myself a "second edition of Adonis," consequently the refusals), in securing the company of a young lady of this city for the ride, a charming girl, by the way, and a most delightful talker.

As soon as we were fairly away from Holland, we began to observe the scenery, and, as my companion called my attention to the different objects of interest, I found that we were passing through a most beautiful stretch of country, and where Esau could only see "sand hills, hemlock stumps," etc., we gazed upon magnificent forests, substantial and elegant farm houses, well cultivated farms, fields of waving grain, and above all, the farmers' buxom wives and daughters, who breathe the pure country air, free from the contaminating influences which lurk in a great city like ours.

We enjoyed all these things as we passed by them, and did not "imagine ourselves seeing the spires of Saugatuck glistening in the sunlight of a summer day," but waited patiently until we approached near enough to see the little village nestling in the valley below us in all its native grandeur.

After reading the article referred to above, I must say that I was most agreeably disappointed. Saugatuck, I found to be one of those charming, thriving little towns, where everything, and everybody, seem to possess an air of business, energy, and ambition, seldom seen outside of large cities. The citizens appeared to be intelligent, well read people, and evinced no curiosity whatever at our appearance, although we doubtless entered the town in as good style as the Holland stage on that memorable day when Esau was one of its passengers.

We, also, stopped at the X—House, which we found to be a hotel of exceedingly fair dimensions. The affable and gettlemannly clerk stood on the veranda as we drove up, and politely assisted us to alight, and escorted us to the sitting-room, at the same time giving orders for our team to be properly cared for. We found this room to be well furnished with splendid carpets, easy chairs, luxurious sofas, beautiful pictures, and all the appointments which betoken a first class hotel.

In a short time we were seated at the dinner table, where we did full justice to as fine a dinner as can be prepared even in Holland.

After dinner we indulged in a stroll about the town; and here let me pause to remark that a young lady, of sixteen or seventeen summers, is a far more agreeable companion than a sour and morose man from Boston. My partner on this occasion was of the former class, and found something to admire at every turn.

We, also, "wandered down to the river," but were not honored sufficient to receive an invitation to ride on that beautiful stream, in a steamer decorated with "flags and banners," or we should have accepted with much pleasure.

Returning to the hotel, our team was ordered and we were soon en route for home, thoroughly impressed with the idea that a ride to Saugatuck, with a cheerful companion, is the best antidote for a fit of the blues extant.

"MEERSCHAUM."

A CURIOUS PROPHECY.

In connection with the present condition of finances, the following communication to the Daily Graphic may be of interest. The writer says:

"Would you oblige me by publishing the enclosed article from 'The Modern Thinker,' No. 2? It was written in September, 1872, and I think you will admit that it was a very good guess (if it was a guess) as to what has since taken place. But if it was not a guess, but a vaticination founded on a distinct theory, surely this theory (which I had then in mind) would be a valuable one for the consideration of the business public. Those who have any doubts as to the fact of the publication of the article at the date indicated above, can see copies of 'The Modern Thinker' at A. J. Davis' book depository, No. 26 Fourth street. The railroad issue had not come to the front in public discussions at that time, and no one then supposed that the Democratic party would show the weakness it has since exhibited. However, here is the article.

THE AUTHOR.

From Modern Thinker, No. 2, published November, 1872.

It is now a commonplace of modern thought that ability to predict establishes the validity of any science. To prove that sociology has made some advance in the direction of certainty, I venture upon a few generalizations touching the future:

1. I predict that the Democratic party will never contest another Presidential election, under its old name and organization. The new administration will have a new name, and will fight under new leaders.

2. I predict that questions of administration, such as civil reform, minority representation, the control of telegraphs and railways, and the extension of the powers of the central government will be the main issues in future political campaigns.

3. I predict that within the coming two years this country will experience the worst financial panic known to its history. It will be more wide-spread and disastrous than even that of 1837. All the debts created by our paper money era will soon be wiped out or compromised. Land will temporarily fall to one-half its present value.

4. This panic will be precipitated, in all probability, by the failure of the Northern Pacific Railway, and perhaps of the bankers who manage it. This will bring to light such an amazing amount of fraud in connection with our railways as to discredit all stock, good and bad. The "bears" will hold high carnival. The men of most repute in financial circles and on the "street" will prove to be common cheats. While the panic will commence, from all appearance, in railway circles, and will for a time be confined to the new western enterprises, it will spread finally to the national banks, and will develop an amount of rottenness in those institutions which is now beyond the power of the imagination to conceive.

5. I predict that in ten years' time the Northern Pacific Railway enterprise will be regarded as one of the most astounding instances of human credulity and folly. It will be a matter of profound astonishment that among a business community tens of thousands of sensible men could be found to invest money with a hope of profit in a railway which began nowhere, ended nowhere, and ran for the most part through a howling wilderness. That this road may be built is possible; that it can be made to pay for the present generation is too crazy a chimera to be for a moment entertained.

6. I predict that when all the great Pacific roads break down, as break they must, an immediate demand will be made for the government to control and run them. This will be the entering wedge for the final control of all means of rapid transit by the central government.

7. I predict that before the breakdown of our railway system, corruption will be rampant in Washington; the railway rings will run the government wherever their interests are at stake.

8. I predict that very few will pay any heed to these prophecies, and that after they prove true they will have been forgotten, and another instance will have been given how prophets are not honored in their own time and nation, in the fate of

A POSITIVE PREDICTOR.

While in Grand Haven this week, our friend, J. A. Leggat invited us into his carriage for a ride about town, which we accepted. Mr. Leggat takes especial pride in what he is doing to improve Grand Haven, and we presume the Grand Havenites join with him. Messrs. Leggat, Duncan & Eastman, proprietors of the property between the city and Lake Michigan, have constructed a beautiful drive-way to the lake, opening up a large extent of territory which has hitherto been considered as nearly useless for building purposes, but as this improvement was pushed toward the lake, romantic sites were brought to view, creating a demand for lots in that vicinity fully justifying the expense of the undertaking. Building lots in this new addition to their city will soon be ready for sale, when we may not be surprised to see the ville of Grand Haven seeking that healthy locality for their future residences. We notice that the people of that place have a faculty of moving sand hills to please them; they seem to be but slight impediments in the way of adornment, and we shall not be disappointed to see ere many years, the sand hills of Grand Haven formed into plateaus and terraced slopes, becoming the most healthy and beautiful portion of their city. We also noticed that a large number of new dwellings are being erected this season, and also several large manufactories.

John Allen, City Marshal of Allegan, has resigned because some of the citizens petitioned for his removal. John possesses a sensitive soul.

In our article last week relative to the five dollar sewing machine, we should have said De Hollander, instead of De Grondwet, is doing the advertising—We hope De Grondwet still lives.

Mr. Harlow Bacon, of Holland, received premiums at the State Pomological Society, for Concord and Diana Grapes, which speaks well for Mr. Bacon, and favorable of this vicinity as a grape growing locality.

Rev. B. F. Doughty, the new pastor of the M. E. Church, in this city, preached his first sermon last Sabbath to an appreciative congregation. Rev. W. A. Bronson and family left for his new field of labor at Rockford, last Thursday.

Hope Church (3d Reformed), is nearly completed, a few weeks more will be required to put on the finishing touches, when we shall have one of the finest churches in the western part of the State. The Episcopal Church is seated and will be ready for occupancy as soon as the windows and warming apparatus are put in. The 3d Reformed Church is being rapidly enclosed, after which, but little will be done upon it until next season.

OUR HARBOR.—We learn from parties who have sounded our harbor that there is twelve feet depth of water there; that since the government agents finished their work the depth of water has gradually increased from ten feet, as left in July, to twelve feet at the beginning of this week. How much the storm of this week may have interfered with our channel, we are not informed; but of this much we are assured from past experience, that with a little care in early spring, we can have one of the best and safest harbors on this shore.

We are informed that Kim's medicines, manufactured by Steketee & Kim, of Grand Rapids, took the first premium at the State Fair, last week. These medicines are becoming almost a household necessity in this part of the State, and when pronounced upon by a competent committee as the best made, it certainly argues well for increased confidence in them for the future. These medicines are becoming deservedly popular, and the manufacturers of them are determined to maintain their integrity by using nothing but the most reliable articles in their composition.

We are informed that parties residing at Saugatuck take exceptions to our correspondent, "Esau's" article, entitled "A Journey to Saugatuck." We also took exceptions to it, and had intended to have followed it with comments of our own, but owing to our other engagements and absence from home, it was omitted in our last issue. If the article is taken in literal meaning it conveys an impression that we do not desire to be instrumental in advocating, and will take this occasion to say that it would convey a sentiment not entertained by the great majority of our citizens, nor of ourself, and knowing the character of our correspondent, we do not think that he sincerely has any such feeling as is construed from it by our friends at Saugatuck. We have none but the friendliest of feelings toward the citizens of that place, and regret that our correspondent should be the means of provoking other than the same feeling toward our own citizens.

For the next sixty days, Mr. Walsh advertises to sell for cash, all goods in his line below that of any other store in Western Michigan. This is a fact, and you can prove it by calling at the City Drug Store. 24-29

Halstead's Pills are pleasant to take, and will cure Fever and Ague—warranted to do it every time. Remember the only place they are sold in this city, is at Walsh's City Drug Store. 31-36

Dr. Mac Rae will be at the City Hotel Holland, Mich., Monday, Oct. 6th, and on the first Monday of each month thereafter, and remain two days, for the especial practice of Surgery, and diseases of the Eye and Ear. Permanent office at Saugatuck, Mich. 15

A RARE CHANCE.—I offer for ready cash, my full stock of Drugs, Medicines, Paints, Oils, etc., at greatly reduced prices; will sell the full stock, or any quantity that may be called for. This offer open for sixty days, at the City Drug Store of H. Walsh. 29-34

The Holland City White Lead is the purest and best White Lead in the market, being ground very fine, and made of the best ingredients, and will cover more surface than any other lead in the market. Mr. Heber Walsh, of our city, is the sole proprietor of this lead, which is made expressly for him and as he receives it direct, can afford to sell it at retail at just what our merchants would have to pay for the same quality at wholesale, in the Chicago market. 30-35

MANHOOD: HOW LOST. HOW RESTORED.

Just published, a new edition of Dr. Cutler's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure (without medicine) of SPERMATORRHOEA or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc.; also, Consumption, Epilepsy and Fits, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagance. Price in a sealed envelope only six cents. The celebrated author, in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically. This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land. Sent under seal, in a plain envelope, to any address, post-paid, on receipt of six cents, or two post stamps. Address the Publishers. CHAS. J. C. KLINE & Co., 127 Bway, New York; Post-Office Box, 4869.

Friends Must Part.

About 11:45 Saturday night, two middle-aged men stopped in front of a house on Essex street, and, after shaking hands with an earnestness and solemnity that was very affecting, one of them said: "Good night, Buggles," to which the other responded, "Good night, Punky." Then both of them stared at each other with wonderful intensity, and finally grasped hands again, "You feel quite well?" said Punky, with some anxiety. "Never better," kindly volunteered Buggles, at the same time turning around on one leg and throwing up one arm to snap his fingers, but changing his mind and hastily clasping Punky around the neck instead. Then he straightened himself up, and looking solemnly at Punky, extended his hand, which that individual hastily grasped, and wrung with a fervor that was simply surprising, while both of them stared at each other in a manner that exhibited an extraordinary interest in the object. "You are a firm friend of mine," said Punky, while the tears gathered in his eyes. "So you are of mine," asserted Buggles in a broken voice. Then they shook hands again. "Nobody seems to understand me as you do," said Punky, trembling with suppressed emotion. "That's just what I've always said of you maintained Buggles, with as much emphasis as his awakened feelings would permit. At this juncture the two were so thoroughly absorbed in contemplating each other's features, as not to notice a night-capped head peering out of an upper window, and were just preparing to grasp hands once more in increased fervor, when a shrill voice screamed, "Come home drunk again, will you?" and was immediately followed by a bucket of water, most unfortunately aimed. The man called Punky immediately bolted over the fence, and around to the back of the house, leaving Mr. Buggles to look around for his hat, which had been knocked off by the force of the shower, and to dispose of himself afterward as he might see proper.—Danbury News.

An Extravagant Mouse.

During the week or two past the proprietor of a restaurant on Griswold street missed more or less money from his till daily, and was finally compelled to suspect some of the persons in his employ. Accordingly, on Thursday evening he marked a number of bills and put them in the drawer, and walking out of his establishment by one door entered it by another, so secretly that no one knew he was in the place. He was next about to hide himself so that he could see the money drawer and not be seen, but to satisfy himself that the money had not been disturbed during his temporary absence, he looked in the drawer, and was astonished to find that the bills had been unrolled and scattered over the bottom, but that none of them had been removed. Then he let his angry passions rise, and loaded his revolver and laid in wait expecting to capture the thief, who he supposed had been hastily driven off while examining the drawer. He remained at his post all night and until daylight without observing anything, and finally concluded to remove the bills and try the experiment some other time. To his unbounded astonishment, however, he discovered that some of the bills had been taken. His hair rose; then he cooled down and grew madder than ever; then he cooled down still more, and made an examination of the drawer. Then he found a knot-hole in the back part. Next he secured the services of a carpenter, and soon found the nest of a mouse, nicely lined with bills of various denominations under the counter. In this place of deposit he found not only the bills he had marked, but also $31 which had previously been stolen.—Detroit Tribune.

A GOOD ONE.—At a political meeting the speaker and audience were much disturbed by a man who constantly called for Mr. Henry. Whenever a new speaker came on the man bawled out, "Mr. Henry! Mr. Henry! I call for Mr. Henry." After several interruptions of this kind at each speech, a young man ascended the platform and was soon airing his eloquence in a magniloquent style striking out powerfully in his gestures, when the outcry was again heard for Mr. Henry. The chairman now arose and remarked that it would oblige the audience if the gentleman would refrain from any farther calling for Mr. Henry, as that gentleman was now speaking. "Is that Mr. Henry?" said the disturber of the meeting. "Thunder! that can't be Mr. Henry! Why that's the little cuss that told me to holler."
