CAMPUS NOTES

Quote, Unquote is an effective sampling of things being said and about Hope.

"It is a truism to say that a task (or work) without vision is drudgery and that work without a task is a dream. But work with a vision gives hope not only of a life of personal fulfillment but also a life of achievement in service of others. This is our calling as teachers: to reach with a clear vision—and to inspire our students with that vision.

'Uniting our individual commitment to learning and teaching into a communal commitment, we can achieve the greatness of which we collectively are capable. Clarifying, shaping, refining our goals, let us join in a task with a vision, bringing new life to our tradition. As we work together to plan for the future of Hope College, let us keep in mind the inspiring advice of one of my favorite modern Greek poets, Cavafy (1863-1933). In his poem, "Ithaka," he urges us:

'Have Ithaka always in your mind. Your arrival there is what you are destined for. But do not in the least hurry the journey. Better that it last for years, so that when you reach the island you are old, rich with all you have gained on the way, not expecting Ithaka to give you wealth. Ithaka gave you the splendid journey. Without her you would not have set out. She hasn't anything else to give you. And if you find her poor, Ithaka has not deceived you. So wise have you become, of such experience, that already you will have understood what these Ithakas mean."

Jacob E. Nyenhuis, provost, from his opening address to faculty.

"The world has become one... The industrialization of Japanese and other families in Detroit... and the American labor of automobiles causes floods in Bangladesh.

'You can't stay in your own little room in this world. If you do, you might find that room is the nursery."

'Thought without action tends to be sterile and action without thought tends to be stupid. It has been noted that those who neglect the past are destined to repeat it. We might paraphrase this by stating that those who neglect the whole are destined to destroy it. We must keep the whole globe in mind as we act in our local place.

from opening convocation address. "Think Globally But Act Locally," by Everett Klemens '43, retired president of East-West Center, Honolulu.

A record student body enrollment for the 1984-85 academic year has been announced. The enrollment headcount is 2,550 students. The previous high was 2,530 students in 1982-83. Last year the Hope student body totaled 2,519.

The number of students enrolled for the first time this fall is also at an all-time high. Last year this category included 522 students. The previous high was in 1981-82 when new student enrollment totaled 599. The number of students transferring to Hope from other colleges and universities totals 110 compared to 135 in 1981-82.

The enrollment by class with last year's figures in parentheses are: freshmen 720 (583), sophomores 594 (468), juniors 367 (268), seniors 193 (157), and special students 196 (203). There are 50 students enrolled in off-campus study programs.

The student body is comprised of 1,174 women and 1,376 men from 39 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and 59 foreign countries.

Michigan has the largest student representation (1,925), followed by Wisconsin (1,345) and Ohio (965).

President Gordon J. Van Wylen has postponed his retirement until June, 1987, after approval in October by the Board of Trustees. The President's extended tenure will allow for his full involvement in developing plans for a capital campaign to build a new library and increase the endowment.

The preparation of working drawings for a new Hope library has been authorized by the Board of Trustees. The College hopes to get out for bids in late spring.

"Alumni for Admissions," a new program introduced in our last issue using alumni volunteers to put Hope application forms into the hands of prospective students, has attracted 100 participants. There is still time to become involved. For further information contact Jim Bekkering, dean for admissions.

"National Science Foundation has awarded Hope a grant of $35,025 for the purchase of a Fourier Transform Infrared Spectrophotometer. The instrument, which identifies and determines the structure of molecules, will be used for research and teaching.

The National Science Foundation has awarded Hope a grant of $20,255 to purchase a new UV/VIS spectrophotometer and related equipment. The instrument measures light absorption by molecules and the rate of chemical reactions.

The National Science Foundation has given Hope a grant of $12,453 to support the work of Donald Cronkite, assistant professor of biology. The grant will purchase an image analysis system for Cronkite's ongoing research into water pollution within certain organisms.

A paper by Hope College political science professors Robert E. Elder, Jr. and Jack E. Holmes has been selected as one of 13 papers to be published in the International Studies Association's 1984 collection of convention papers. Rhythms in Politics and Economics. published by Praeger Publishers of New York. The paper "International Economic Long Cycles and American Foreign Policy Moods," was presented last March.

Elder and Holmes argue that international economic long cycles and American foreign policy moods have several important relationships. Their paper is the third in a series which builds on American foreign policy mood research by Holmes and Elder's background in research methodology.

Ray Gutknecht '67 has been named supervisor of public safety. He has been a member of the staff since 1981.

George Kraft, professor of physical education, has written a book, Coaching the Fundamentals of Football. published by Allyn and Bacon.

Kraft has been Hope's offensive line coach since 1967, an era considered to be the most successful period in the history of Dutchmen football. Over the years he has written nearly 15 articles on different aspects of coaching football.

The book is divided into five sections. The first two aim at the pre-game aspects of coaching. The other three deal with the part of the game fans see. The book is written for use as a college textbook or as a guidebook for new coaches.

Mark Leenhouts '78 has been promoted to assistant business manager. He has served as office systems manager since joining the Hope staff in 1982. This change includes responsibility for implementing a campus-wide word processing system utilizing the College's new computer.

Bruce McCombs, associate professor of art at Hope College, recently had a print entitled "Joan Crawford's Bedroom" included in the permanent collection of the Arkansas Art Center, Little Rock.

Delbert Michel, professor of art, has been informed by the president of the International Art Competition that his work has been selected to be exhibited in slide shows in museums and galleries throughout the Los Angeles area.

News from Hope College, October/November 1984

Peter Schakel, professor of English, presented a paper on Jonathan Swift at a symposium in Munster, Federal Republic of Germany.

Linda Ludington Seitz has been named the new manager of computer and information services. She was previously manager of information systems at Kalamazoo College.

John J. Shaughnessy, associate professor of psychology, has co-authored a textbook, Research Methods in Psychology, available in January from Alfred A. Knopf Publishers. The book covers a broad range of descriptive, experimental and applied research methods with actual research studies in many areas used to illustrate the steps that lead from defining a research problem to developing the means to uncover its solution. Co-author is Eugene B. Zechmeister of Loyola University of Chicago.

Kathleen Verduin, assistant professor of English, presented a paper at the Interdisciplinary Conference on Netherlands Studies in Washington, D.C. Her topic was the image of the Dutch in American literature.

Boyd Wilson, assistant professor of religion, was in India this summer for a Fulbright seminar titled "India Through its Great Literature."

James Zoetewey, professor of political science, was one of 25 scholars who participated in a seminar on the First Amendment recently held at the University of Illinois. The seminar was organized to direct attention to the 1987 bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

Three appointments to endowed faculty chairs were made by the Board of Trustees in October. Peter J. Schakel of the English department was appointed to the Peter C. and Emajean Cook Endowed Professorship. James Gentle of the biology department was appointed to the Kenneth G. Herrick Endowed Professorship. Theodore L. Nielsen of the communication department was appointed to the Guy Vander Jagt Endowed Professorship.

New appointments to the faculty include: Hersilia C. Alvarez-Ruf, visiting instructor in Spanish; Gerald R. Bakker, visiting professor in chemistry; Daniel M. Ebels, visiting assistant professor of economics; Samuel R. Floyd III, assistant professor of music; Charles Kemp Gray, assistant professor of psychology, Edward C. Hansen, assistant professor of geology; Carol Hinson, visiting instructor in physical education, recreation and athletics; James Herrick, assistant professor of communication; Dan Huizenga, visiting instructor in theatre.

Also, David P. Jensen, director of libraries; Thomas D. Kennedy, visiting professor of religion and philosophy; Anne R. Larsen, associate professor of French; and Maureen Gallagher Lesni, assistant professor of nursing; Karen A. Neufeld, associate professor of education; Patricia A. Ponton, visiting instructor in psychology; Donna Saxs, assistant professor of physical education, recreation and athletics; Richard K. Smith, intern in English; Gillian Stolzman, visiting assistant professor of biology; Louis J. Systma, assistant professor of nursing; Schinichiro Takehira, visiting assistant professor of engineering science; Kathleen M. Thompson, intern in English; and James M. Van Der Laan, visiting assistant professor of German.

Letters

The August, 1984, issue warmed my heart.

The article "Knock, Knock, Where's the Door?" is an example of serious wit by the author.

How much Hope is a part of the world and its struggle was best illustrated by the article "Hope's Counter-Culture Comes Home." Indeed, this school takes seriously its "life and world view" as part of its Christianity. The hearts and minds of students and faculty struggle with the sense of responsibility that is theirs as Christians. Anyone thinking about a college to which to go can see this campus of Hope is not isolated, the college embraces the people of the world and their circumstances.

The "Scenes from a Campus" was indeed a romantic piece. The biblical spirit of the pilgrim is still rich in the heritage of Hope. Thanks for a paper that continues to keep me alert and sensitive to the world at large and to a school that I am indebted to for doors that have been opened to enrich my heart and mind.

Bill Bennett '49
Holland, Mich.

I enjoy News from Hope College and wish to compliment you and your staff. I do wish I could attend the '79 reunion this year. But I would hate to leave my first-graders sitting with a substitute. So, I am looking forward to the Homecoming issue as being "the next best thing to being there." Keep up the good work!

Ted L. Whitefeet '79
Rayne, La.

While it may seem somewhat self-congratulatory, I am proud of my academic achievements at Hope, therefore, I am not ashamed to let you know I am disappointed that my name was omitted from the list of magna cum laude graduates (Aug. issue).

Editor's note: The registrar's office reports that a conclusive list of graduation honors is hard to come by before September due to many variables in student programs. Apologies to you if anyone else was overlooked, please inform the editor.

Limited-Edition Record for Givers

All new donors and donors who increase the amount of their gifts to the 1984-85 Annual Alumni Fund will receive a limited special edition stereo recording "Christmas Vesper, Volume II."

This recording of selections from recent Christmas Vesper has been produced by Hope College's music department.

Due to a limited supply, only one record per donor or alumni couple is being offered. Please allow six weeks for delivery.

BEYOND HOPE: A new 150-ft.-radio tower erected on the DeWitt Center roof will make it possible for the student station, WHHS, to broadcast beyond campus dorms to the entire Holland/Zeeland area. The new FM station should be on the air in January. Programming will be mostly music and the target audience will continue to be the College community.

Homecoming theme draws glad hatters

"Fists Off to Professors" was the theme of Homecoming October 18-21 as Hope alumni saluted the faculty.

The theme was selected by the Alumni Association in recognition of the faculty's important contribution to the excellence of the College.

Homecoming at Hope also coincided with National Higher Education Week (Oct. 13-20). The national theme was "We Have the Future in Minds." The City of Holland declared Oct. 13-20 Higher Education Week in Holland.

Special recognition of Hope's faculty occurred Saturday during the Homecoming football game. Lynette Carter of Midland, Mich., was crowned queen and Dave Beckman of Shelby, Mich., was crowned king. After the game the Alumni Association hosted a reception at nearby Smallenberg Park to honor faculty members past and present.

There were several other special events in addition to the many traditional activities of Homecoming weekend.

An invitational exhibition of art featuring works by alumni opened Thursday in the gallery of the DeVos Art Center. The show, which runs through Nov. 30, features the works of 22 alumni from throughout the country. Photographs of selected works will be presented in the December issue of Hope Magazine, along with poetry and prose from "Alumni Opus," the second alumni arts magazine sponsored by the Alumni Association.

The Fraternal Society, one of the oldest social fraternities in the nation, celebrated its 150th anniversary during Homecoming weekend with several special events (see story, below).

The 7th annual Run-Bike-Swim, which has grown to include more than 900 participants, was held Saturday morning.

Dr. Elton Bruins, dean for the arts and humanities and chairman of the Hope College archives council, led campus tours with an historical emphasis.

Reunions for members of the classes of 1974 and 1979 will continue next Thursday (see photos, p. 13) and as get-togethers for present and past members of fraternities and sororities were other weekend highlights. The H-Club, which consists of alumni who participated in athletics, held its annual get-together Saturday night (see p. 9).

The Homecoming football game featured the Dutchmen against defending Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association champion Adrian at Holland Municipal Stadium and marked Hope's 24th consecutive Homecoming victory with a final score of 38-17.

Both the soccer and cross-country teams entertained Adrian on Friday afternoon.

The Rev. Peter Semeyn, minister of Christ Church in Oak Brook, Ill., and a member of the College chaplain's staff, delivered the sermon at the Sunday worship service in Dimnent Memorial Chapel. The Alumni Chapel Choir, this year numbering approximately 50 strong, sang "Great Is Thy Faithfulness." The Choir's first song of the evening was "Alumni Opus," the second alumni arts magazine sponsored by the Alumni Association.

But what no man could bring back from personal memory was the origin of their fraternity which created the weekend's celebration.

In 1834, the Fraternal Society began at Union College in Schenectady, N.Y. with its first enrollment of nine members. In 1861, OKE was founded in New York by the Rev. Dr. Philip Phelps, an alumnus of Union College, first president of the Holland Academy and a great-grandfather of the College.

Phelps made the main thrust of the organization, the cultivation of literature, friendship, and morality. The watchwords "Friendship, Love and Truth" have remained the motto of Fraternal ever since.

From its beginnings with nine members to an enrollment of 70-80 in the 1960's, the Fraternal Society has experienced many trials and triumphs. Between 1964 and 1979, the 123rd in the nation, the Fraternal alumni association experienced many trials and triumphs. Before the Pull

by Doug Holm

Kraig Peterson had been feeling the pressure for three weeks, but now it was peaking. The night before several pullers slept over-night, it you could call it that. It had been like this every night since Pull practice began.

Being a sophomore this time around, he wanted badly to win and the intensity kept him up nights. Sometimes, lying there unable to sleep for hours, he would keep his roommate awake by talking about the Pull until he provoked a "Shut up!"—then he'd think about it some mor.

But now it was THE day. Although he had not slept well, he was wide-awake and ready. The pressure was intense, and his mind wandered as he sat in the classes he attended. He skipped offers. Nervousness also set in. To block it out, Kraig said to himself, "I'm going to do my best."

After eating a large lunch to boost his energy level, he and the rest of his teammates spent time together in a meeting where emotions flowed.

All pumped up from the meeting, Kraig quietly rode the bus to the Black River, his mind on winning. Soon, he found himself in his pit. Knowing what to do now, he helped reel in the rope. He was ready: "Come on, let's do it!"

Nervous. That's how Doris Niehof felt as she rode on the bus and walked to the pits. She was thinking that no matter what happened the freshmen could be considered winners because they had worked so hard together and had become very close. But still, she didn't want that losing feeling after all they had gone through the past three weeks. And, after all, the freshmen are perennial underdogs—so she was still nervous.

She had gotten little sleep the night before. A combination of exhaustion, frustration from falling behind in homework, and expectation about tomorrow's Pull kept her mind from resting. Her morning classes passed by without any incident, at least none she noticed.

But, none of that mattered anymore. The Pull was only minutes away! Doris had her hands full keeping her pullers morale up and combating her own nervousness. It was funny that as she paid attention to trying to build her "guy's" confidence, she didn't have as much time to worry about herself.

And then the Pull started. Doris expected they might lose a lot of rope in a sudden sophomore wave. However, that didn't happen; in fact they took in some rope. Her attitude was now positive as she commenced to scream her lungs out.

"Come on, let's get it going," said Kurt Kossen. He was tired of waiting. He had been looking forward to his first Pull for three weeks and now it was about to begin.

The butterflies had set in the night before. The fact that he would be on the rope for keeps the next day had released him. He had no idea what to expect. He didn't know what the Pull was going to be like, so he found himself with a case of nerves.

The freshmen pullers had called a meeting the night before the Pull and it served as a morale boost. It psyched them up and also got them nervous. Kurt returned to his room afterwards and couldn't get to sleep. He just lay there thinking about the next day.

And when Pull day came, he overslept two hours, missing his first two classes. He sat quietly as the bus made its way to the site. He was ready to go, but there were still things to do in preparation—the pits were a mess because it had rained, he had to bail water. Then he had to get the pit ready for the day's struggle. And then, he would have to wait some more. Wait, wait...

On Sept. 28 the freshman class won Hope's 87th Pull by judge's decision after 2 hours and 30 minutes on the rope.

Thousands of thoughts flashed through Terri Henry's mind. She felt like crying. Here was the spot where they had been beaten last year. Would that happen again, would the pullers again go through all that pain? "That can't happen," she thought. "The guys have all improved and the team is really close, so we should win. But, there's the freshmen team across the river and, boy, do they sound enthusiastic. Maybe they aren't as unprepared as we had counted.

Terri had been nervous the first day of practice, nervous the previous night, nervous through her classes which she somehow set through, nervous on the bus ride and now here they were. Terri was nervous. The Pull was about to start.

The night before was like Christmas Eve, so hard it was to imagine the Pull being tomorrow. But Terri didn't know what to expect, whether or not it would turn out well. And this was her second—and last—chance to win the Pull. There is only one Pull and this is it. What is going to happen?
The turned-on library

by David Jensen

"Where's the card catalog?"

Although that question is unlikely to gain the national popularity of octogenarian Clara Peller's Where's the Beef? query, it may be heard frequently on Hope's campus in two or three years when a new college library has been constructed, dedicated, and opened for business.

Library-users are likely to scan their new surroundings by habit in search of the bank of little drawers that has traditionally saved them from hours of aimless wanderings among the shelves.

But there will be nothing resembling the traditional card catalog in Hope's new library. Instead, there will be a catalog on computer—one which will be a great improvement over its paper predecessor.

This on-line catalog, of course, will impress first of all because of its looks, with a television-type screen and hi-tech hardware replacing the familiar grain of oak cabinetry. But will it function differently? Yes and no.

Yes, there will be all the information you now find on cards, but you won't always have to locate yourself in the same spot to use that information. A computerized catalog is a portable catalog, able to be called forth wherever there is a terminal—which in the case of Hope's new library will be on each of the five levels. We also expect to have telephone access to the catalog by way of modems. Eventually we may be able to link the College's other computers to the library computer, so that a student could take a look at the catalog from a dorm room or a professor could use it from his or her office.

In addition to increased accessibility, the computerized catalog offers expanded possibilities for finding the materials you need or want. Yes, you will still be able to find books by author, title, or subject just as you now do. However, you will also be able to look for books by key words. That means if you don't know the exact title of a book and can't remember the author, you may be able to find it anyway if you remember some major words in the title.

In addition, we hope you will be able to search for materials by combining terms with "and" or "or" (children and computers, for example). This should make for far more effective catalog searching.

Finally, an on-line catalog tells the user immediately whether or not a particular book is already in circulation, thereby eliminating those frustrating, time-wasting trips to a stack where an empty space greets you instead of the book you were expecting.

With an on-line catalog, you will know if the book is in use because the same computer system which maintains the list of library holdings will also run our automated circulation system. Instead of laboriously writing down call numbers, authors, titles, your name, address, and your phone number in the new library you will be able to check out books by simply presenting your special ID card. Information about both book and borrower will be recorded in the computer's memory in much the same way that the prices of groceries are recorded at the cash register of a supermarket. When the book is returned it will be cleared with the same equipment and will automatically be listed in the catalog as again available for borrowing.

Some books are in greater demand than others, and the new system will help immensely in handling waiting lists. Suppose, for instance, that you borrowed Umberto Eco's bestseller The Name of the Rose and I also wanted to read it. I would ask the circulation librarian to put a "hold" on the book. When you returned it, the staff person checking it back in would receive a signal (a beep or bell). Looking at the monitor, the staff member would see that the book is on hold and shouldn't be reshelved. My name, address, and phone number would also appear on the monitor as next in line for checking out that book. Thus, what is now a cumbersome process with many chances for error will become streamlined and more accurate.

The on-line catalog will not only list books in Hope's library, it will also record the titles and volume-numbers of magazines and journals that are in our holdings. A big advantage in this area will be that new issues will appear in the on-line catalog as soon as they have been checked in; at present we use a serials list which is revised and printed just once a year.

The computer is already being used at Hope's library to search various indexes of periodicals for articles on particular subjects. Many indexes, including Chemical Abstracts and Current Index to Journals in Education are available both on-line and in printed form. Recently we have been examining a computer-produced index on microfilm which appears to be very effective.

Does all of this mean you won't be able to find the old Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature? For a while, it will still appear on the index tables, but even this standard library reference will soon be available on-line. Eventually the index tables, like the card catalog drawers, may be replaced by computer terminals, or by microfilm readers.

The computer is also affecting our interlibrary lending program. More and more of our interlibrary lending requests are being sent and received via the Online Computer Library Center (OCLC) terminal, and by the time our new library opens most of that processing will also be done on-line. Use of OCLC should speed fulfillment of requests to other libraries, as well as requests we receive for materials from our library.

Other technological changes in the new library include:

- Use of computer terminals instead of typewriters for word processing
- On-line management of all magazines and journals, including acquisition processing, claims for missing issues and regular binding schedules
- On-line searches for books that have been ordered, to verify information and enter titles into the catalog system (which means that books on order will immediately appear in the catalog with a special designation)

Finally, the computer will help manage overdue books by automatically printing overdue notices. That may not be good news to people like me who have trouble returning books on time (yes, it happens to librarians the same as everyone else), but it's definitely good news to staff members who now spend hours typing these notices.

The library staff is convinced that the integrated on-line system will allow us to serve users more efficiently and more effectively by offering the benefits of simple check-out, a portable catalog and the ability to find materials with more ease and precision. We hope that means the library will be used more and thereby contribute more to the College's commitment to excellence.
Bridge-builders mark ties

The 20th anniversary of a student exchange program involving Hope and Tokyo's Meiji Gakuin University was celebrated this fall with the campus visit of Makoto Morii, Ph.D., president of Meiji Gakuin University since 1982 and a member of the faculty since 1965.

Morii was on hand for Hope's opening convocation, Aug. 28, an event which formally marked the beginning of what has been declared "International Year" at the College. Visits by special guests and many other events are being scheduled for the purpose of expanding global awareness among students and the faculty.

Morii, who remained in Holland for several days, voiced praise for the exchange program which since 1965 has brought more than 500 Japanese students to Hope and since 1980, when it became a bilateral exchange, has taken 50 Hope students to Tokyo as part of May Term offerings.

"Japan is a world force that is surrounded by the sea. It is geographically separate and most of its people know other cultures by books only," stated Morii. "Therefore, the opportunity to come and study in America is very precious."

Last year Hope and Meiji Gakuin signed a formal contractual agreement to continue their student exchanges, to support an accompanying faculty member with grants and an exchange program. This contract is especially significant because of Hope's longstanding ties to Japan, extending back to 1889 when the first international student, a Japanese, arrived.

Meiji Gakuin is a Christian university founded in 1927 by American missionaries.

Today the university enrolls 10,000 students in four departments: literature, sociology, economics and law. Its campus is about one-third the size of Hope. There are no student or faculty problems to take advantage of Japan's strong economy, a new campus for first and second-year students is being built in Yokohama. Once completed in 1985, the new campus will allow the university to launch a new department, international studies.

Unlike the chief officers of American colleges, Morii has no concerns about recruitment or dollars. Operating expenses are fully covered by tuition and Japanese students compete intensely for admittance to universities.

Morii said his greatest challenges as president are to maintain Meiji Gakuin's Christian identity with a faculty that is only 20 percent Christian, and to make that identification meaningful to a student body which is only 10 percent Christian. He voiced concern that Japan's secondary schools promote conformity and do little to develop humanistic values. In addition, the "nouveau riche" status of the country has given rise to extreme materialism, he stated.

"The idea that's common in Japan today is that to become rich is to become happy. We must show that happiness for humans exist in other ways. We must educate human beings to serve the weak and seek peace in the world."

Surely at least part of Japan's materialism comes from the nation's intrigue with the American way of life. Yet, despite Japanese students' eagerness to master English and have contact with the American culture, Morii said their enthusiasm are not symptoms of a blind desire to become Westernized.

"In some ways, Japan is a strange country. It is isolated, but it is also always expecting something beyond the horizon. Its history has been one of assimilation-taking the foreign influence, be it Chinese or European or American—and Japanizing it so it becomes part of the national character."

The 15 Japanese students who for one month lived with Hope students in the dorms and attended special seminars focused on contemporary social and economic issues certainly did their share of pick-and-choose assimilation of American culture.

For example, they were aghast with American students' practice of leaving a meal table before others had finished and they found Hope students' habit of stroking the campus barefoot beyond comprehension. Their own footgear, they explained, is too rough to handle the changing slippery surfaces whenever one changes rooms to avoid the transportation of soil.

Despite these and other cultural tremors, the Japanese visitors found much that was pleasantly fascinating about life at Hope. One such intrigue was the American custom with compliments.

"In Japan, a compliment is always deprecated. In America, people accept compliments—they say 'Thank you' and enjoy receiving the compliment," noted Junko Matsuda, a participant in this year's exchange.

"That's a good question, or 'Good idea' in Japan that never happens in the classroom. Americans enjoy compliments, but at the time they accept them so willingly that the admiration sometimes seems meaningless.

"Matsuda was ambivalent about differences she perceived in sex-related social behavior.

"In Japan, guys like girls to be quiet and retiring," she noted, mimicking a classic geisha pose. "In America, girls can be outgoing andrazy. I like that. It's more fun to be around American men."

Matsuda, a junior at Meiji Gakuin, obviously is among Japan's new kimono-burning generation of women who are attempting to mesh their aspirations for equality into the fabric of extreme deference which has traditionally been the lengthening characteristic of the Japanese woman.

While in Holland Matsuda conducted an independent study of American family relationships, especially as regards the care of the elderly. In Japan care of the elderly has traditionally been the responsibility of their grown sons. Because most Japanese men pivot their family lives around the heavy demands of competitive professional lives, that care has fallen mostly on women's shoulders. Not surprisingly, given the fact that only 10 percent of Japan's women believe they are treated equally in terms of social perceptions and customs, Matsuda was favorably impressed with the American system of nursing homes for the elderly.

"Having choices and exercising one's individuality are characteristics that America stands for, and I like that way of thinking," she noted. "The senior citizens I talked to seemed happy too, living vigorously and creating and not feeling they were burdens to others."

At Hope Matsuda and her fellow students participated in academic seminars on topics including "The American Family," "Crime in America," and "The Economics of the American Dream." They had field trips to local points of interest (industries, churches, windmill island, etc.) and participated in campus events ranging from fall convocation to a football game. In addition, they staged a "Japan Night" to expand Hope students' views of their Pacific neighbors. The Meiji Gakuin visitors were adamant that the event be a kimonoori-odogaro fantasy. Too often, these colorful displays wear the guise of cultural exchange when in fact they contribute nothing to expanded global consciousness, they successfully argued.

How valuable is the Hope-Meiji Gakuin exchange? Obviously, Hope students are not going to grasp in three-week stints the complexities of a society which has been described as psychologically and linguistically vexed by people who've lived there for years.

Hope senior Jennifer Irons, who spent the entire last year studying at Tokyo's Waseda University through a Great Lakes Colleges Association program, confirms the difficulty of fully understanding the Japanese because of different ways of interacting.

"Much of what the Japanese say to each other often seems to be without words," she noted.

Similarly, Maryumi Kato, a Japanese student who studied at Hope last year, came hoping to understand the American character and, in doing so, to come to a deeper recognition of herself. However, at year's end she concluded that even to tell what she did not understand.

And yet, the short-term exchanges frequently are beginnings which at least make participants aware of their cross-cultural attractions. In large part, American interest in Japan is economic, as the smaller nation's success at home made it a mighty competitor in world markets. Yet, the attraction can also be explored, as Time magazine did in a 1985 issue totally devoted to the subject of Japan.

In some ways, America and Japan are interesting communities on each other's Basketball beckons fans

An outstanding nucleus of experienced senior players once again gives cause for optimism for the Hope men's basketball team. The Flying Dutchmen of coach Clance Van Wieren have won four straight MIAA championships and have been to the NCAA Division III national championships the last three seasons.

The team was ranked first in the nation among Division III teams most of last season and were the only NCAA school to go through the regular season undefeated (22-0). Ticket manager Jan Mason reports that enthusiasm for the season is high. Already all reserved season tickets are sold and capacity audiences are predicted for most home games.

Van Wieren

Three Hope games are scheduled for live television this coming season—Dec. 4 at Grand Valley, Jan. 23 at Calvin and Feb. 16 against Calvin at home.

"Our strength is in our seniors," reports Van Wieren who begins his eighth season as head coach. "Our primary goal this season will be to develop the bench strength that in recent years has been the hallmark of our successful program."

Graduated from last year's team are center Jeff Heerdt and play-making guard Todd Schuiling. Returning are nine lettermen, including six seniors.

Up front the team will be led by 6-6 power forward Chip Henry of Kentwood, Mich. Last year as a junior Henry became the first Hope player ever to achieve Kodak All-America first team status. He was also voted the Michigan Male College Basketball Player of the Year by the Michigan Basketball Advisory Council and shared most valuable player honors in the MIAA with Randy Morrison of Olivet College. Henry led the team in scoring last year with 17 points per game, shot 62 percent from the floor and averaged nearly eight rebounds a contest.

Also returning up front will be senior forward John Klunder of Grand Rapids, Mich., who was one of four starters averaging in double figures last year with an 11.3 points per game average.

The third returning starter is senior guard Dave Beckman of Shelby, Mich., who last year led the MIAA in shooting percentage and has an outstanding lifetime average of 62%. Beckman's 66% field goal average in all games last year ranked him second in the nation in NCAA Division III.

Other returning veterans who considered action last year are junior guard Scott Gelander of St. Joseph, Mich., who averaged 6.5 points per game and led the team in free throw accuracy at 87%, senior center Dan Gustaf of Manistee, Mich., whose six points per game average included several crowd-pleasing dunks, and senior guard Jeff Del of Chicago, Mich., who saw action in every game.

The Dutchmen will play an expanded schedule of 24 games (two more than previous years) followed by the MIAA including a tournament at Ohio Weslayan University and a two-night holiday tournament involving Reformed Church colleges Central and Northwestern of Iowa and western Michigan rival Calvin. Wheaton College of Illinois is back on the schedule after an absence of several years.

Henson

Senior forward John Klunder will bring his 11.3 points-per-game record to bear on this year's season.

The Hope women's basketball team enters the 1984-'85 campaign with a solid core of returning letterwinners and several promising newcomers, coming off their most successful season in history.

The Flying Dutch will be coached by Carol Henson who also guided the Hope field hockey team this fall. Henson previously was an instructor in physical education and coach at Christian High School in San Diego, Calif., where she also served as athletic director and girls basketball coach.

She also coached girls' basketball at Sebring (Fla.) High School, where in 1976 she was the coach of the year in the school's conference. She received the bachelor of science degree from Central Michigan University and the master of arts in education degree from Arizona State University in California.

At Central Michigan, Henson was a four-year starter on the women's basketball team.

A year ago the Flying Dutch posted a 15-7 record and were fourth in the MIAA race with a 7-5 mark. The record was especially impressive because Hope played only seven of its 22 games at home. During the season, Hope ended with an eight-point margin of victory over its opponents and twice during the season put together live game winning streaks. They set new single season records for field goal percentage (44%), free throw accuracy (62%) and scoring (68.3 points per game).

The Flying Dutch must replace guard Robin Proffer and Mary Schaap. A guard, Proffer was Hope's all-time leading scorer and Schaap graduated as the career leader in rebounding.

Leading the returnees is junior Karen Geras of Lansing, Mich., who became the first Hope player to be voted to the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association all-conference women's basketball team. She set a new Hope single season scoring record with 324 points.

Other returning veterans include junior guard Beth Beachum of Lowell, Mich., senior forward Tami Lapenga of Grand Haven, Mich., junior guard Annette Van Engen of Mattawan, Mich. Lapenga was voted the team's most improved player a year ago. She and Beachum will co-captain the Flying Dutch this season.

The Flying Dutch have nine home dates at the Dow Center this season, including an invitational tournament on Jan. 1-5 involving Wheaton College and Trinity Christian College of Illinois, and Taylor University of Indiana. The season opens with the Great Lakes College Association tournament at the College of Wooster in Ohio on Nov. 30-Dec. 1.

Karen Orman, who last season dunked a record 128 points, intends to keep her winning drive in full gear.

H-Club honorees

Four Hope College alumni who distinguished themselves as student-athletes were honored by the alumni H-Club during its annual Homecoming luncheon.

The H-Club is comprised of Hope alumni who participated in intercollegiate athletics while students.

Honored were Faye Berens '82 of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Doug Formas '68 of Broken Arrow, Okla.; the Rev. John Kleinheksel '60 of Zeeland, Mich.; and Tom Page '72 of Holland, Mich.

The H-Club also gave special recognition to Tom Renner, director of college relations, for his work in publicizing the athletic program.

Berens was the first Hope female athlete to win 12 letters as she completed her four years in volleyball, basketball and softball. She was voted to the AIAW all-state team in softball four straight years.

Formas was a standout runner on Hope cross-country and track teams. As a senior he was the MIAA's most valuable runner in cross-country and was the league track champion in both the mile and two mile runs. All of his performances were in school record times.

Kleinheksel has the distinction of holding the oldest existing Hope and MIAA track record. In 1958 as a sophomore Kleinheksel cleared 23 feet, 6-1/2 inches in the long jump to win his first of three consecutive MIAA championships in that event. Kleinheksel was also a letterwinner in basketball, playing on MIAA championship teams his sophomore and junior years.

Page was voted the MIAA's most valuable golfer in 1971 and was a member of the all-conference team as both a junior and senior. It was the last time Hope had the league MVP in golf.

Renner, a member of the Hope staff since 1967, coordinates the College's public relations programs, including sports information. Several of his sports publications have received national awards. He also serves as publicist for the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association.
Who takes over when

The housemother may be a thing of the past but all is still under control in Hope dorms and cottages

by Laurie Brown

The term R. A. holds many connotations. For some it suggests an authority figure: a leader, a surrogate parent, perhaps even an enemy. But for most an R. A. is a friend. Resident assistants, head residents and assistant head residents act as buffers that lessen the hard edges of life in the residence units. Defining the roles of Hope's 75 R. A.'s and assistant R. A.'s (all students) and 27 head residents (adults) is difficult because of the variety of living units and number of students under their charge. But all have agreed to devote a significant amount of their time to help Hope's 1,650 students who live in campus housing.

Her door is always open on 3rd floor Kollen Hall and that could mean a lot of traffic for Laurey Ellerton, Jr. As R. A. in Kollen Hall, Ellerton is in charge of 48 women. Experienced as a former R. A. in Dykstra Hall, she decided to move to the other side of campus and tackle the job of an R. A. on a floor rather than the cluster system of rooms in Dykstra.

"Since I am a communication major, I have a deep interest in people, and also I wanted to give back to people the good experience received in my freshman dorm experience."

Ellerton sees the job of R. A. as being a role model and she claims a deep sense of devotion to her "girls."

I am very careful not to be just a police officer, but rather a friend," she notes.

Ellerton feels the term friendship is the key to being a good R. A. "What I've learned from being an R. A. is establishing relationships, learning to remain removed when a situation calls for an authority figure, coping with being disliked because of your position, but, more importantly, learning to take constructive criticism."

Because of their prominence, R. A.'s are subjects of occasional pranks. Ellerton can recall one such time when she first began her R. A. position. After frequent reminders of parietals and the departure of male visitors on the floor before midnight, Ellerton's cluster thought it would be humorous to "penny" in a male visitor at 11:55 p.m. in her room. Not only did they jam the room door but also the cluster's door.

"Here I was breaking the rules that I just reminded everyone to obey while I had a girlfriend frantically hammering my escape from the outside of the cluster—we weren't set free until 1:30 a.m."

The job may be hectic and at times thankless, but she enjoys the friendships she has formed.

"I love knowing that I have been an influence in someone's life and it is a

Reflections on the college send-off

Lost a daughter or gained a bathroom?

by Pat Jones

I've been in Holland for five years. I am not a Hope College graduate, nor did I ever matriculate at Hope. None of my relatives has ever attended Hope. I do not have a Dutch name. There is no one in my family who has given his daughter to a Hope College cottage. I don't even hold a Dow Center card. In fact, for the last years I have had no credentials to enable me to claim Hope College as my Alma Mater, or even my Alma Shoostring Relation. Believe me, in Holland, Michigan, this is not an enviable position.

But now, listen to the trumpets blare! In September of 1984, Hope College became mine! I am the proud parent of a freshman daughter. She lives in Dykstra Hall! She attended the Pull and is participating in Nykerk. She passes the anchor every day, and dines at Philips Hall. The chairs she sits in were donated by the Hope College Women's League. She swims at the Dow. Yes sir, that's my baby, and yes sir, that's our college.

What a feeling—beats believing!

On the other hand, I've gained a college but I've lost a daughter. She's only a few blocks down the street—why do I feel as if she were in Siberia? It's not quite like that first day of kindergarten when I launched her on her first voyage. I cried then, but I know she'd be home for peanut butter and jelly at lunch. That was a new chapter. Now I'm crying, because this is a new book. Will it be poetry or prose; tragedy or comedy; mystery, or a Harlequin Romance; hard cover or paperback? It's out of my hands now. She is the writer and the author.

I miss her! I miss her! It is nice to have the bathroom back. The air is not split with whirring hair dryers and hard rock. The telephone receiver lies peacefully in its cradle. All is quiet on the domestic front. But—I'm accustomed to the trace of something in the air—acustomed to her face, I miss her!

I also miss—her hair dryer, three lipsticks, the curling iron, the luggage, my favorite skirts, three pairs of earrings, six sweaters and my radio. If I don't make it to Parents Weekend it's because I have nothing to wear! As I think about this experience (you must indulge me—she's my first) songs keep humming around in my head. The list includes: "Button up Your Overcoat," "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now," "You'll Never Walk Alone," "Climb Every Mountain," and the parents' favorite: "Oh, We Ain't Got a Barrel of Money—maybe we're ragged and funny—but we've got a kid in Hope College!"

"Hopefully she isn't "Misbehaving" and will come "Shining Through.""

Oh, what questions haunt me! Did I teach her table manners (I can't remember)? Does she have good etiquette (it all went by so fast)! Will she have an accident? Does she have enough matching socks? Will she keep her room? Will she pass? How can she possibly get along without me nagging her? Can anyone ever love her as much or be as proud of her as her father and I are?

I'm sure some of these questions and concerns and feelings are on the minds of fellow parents. It's part of the territory. Perhaps I can pass on some "insider's" information which will help put your mind at ease.

For those of you who don't know our fair city—there is a church on every corner. Holland is not dry—but only a little wet. Everyone here smiles and says hello. The streets roll up at 9:00. There is an excellent police force.

More significantly, Hope College will give our freshmen individual and personalized tender nurture and guidance. I know in my heart of hearts I couldn't do it better myself.

In my husband's words, "If you are going to spend all of your money in one place, it couldn't be a better place than Hope."

And when all such wisdom fails, I take heart in knowing it's only a few weeks until Thanksgiving vacation.

I wonder how I'm going to break it to Kirsty that her sister has taken over her room?

Pat Jones is the mother of freshman Kirsty. She teaches children's dramatics and is the wife of a Reformed Church minister.

Not just a police officer: Kollen Hall R.A. Laurey Ellerton.
Great place since cottage-mates have college life," says, "Cottage personality clashes demand a certain amount of fix-it ingenuity to see breakdowns through until maintenance arrives.

Kevin Spotts, Sr., Welmers cottage R.A., can't complain; however. He says, "Cottage life is the best kind of college life," and he and his seven cottage-mates have found Welmers a great place to live.

Spotts, a second-year R.A. in Welmers, enjoys the job, especially since things run so smoothly there that usually the only thing distinguishing him from his charges is that he's the one who takes out the trash!

"In my freshman year in Durfee Hall, my R.A. always had his door open so I guess that is the type of attitude I take.

Welmers Cottage is run basically on the principle of being open to one another's feelings.

"If the music is too loud—you just go and ask them to turn it down rather than setting quiet hours . . . . I have no problems with being an R.A. because they are all my friends—I don't feel as if I am an authority but I would be if I had to be.

Welmers residents, like their dorm counterparts, plan activities such as 'Date Night' and other social activities.

"We do things as a cottage, so my position as R.A. is that I come as a friend and am looked to as an equal," he said.

They know that manning an all-male dorm wasn't going to be easy, but Gregg and Mary Afman accepted the challenge of serving as head residents of Durfee Hall last fall and are now in their second year on the job.

"The main reason was to get involved with students on a different level—to see what other situations happen to students," explained Gregg, also assistant professor of physical education. For Mary, it was a job that could get her involved with the students and yet enable her to be home with her active 3 1/2 year-old, David.

The Afmans are one of seven faculty couples who live in Hope residents halls as head residents. Over the years that old dorm fixture, the housemother, has become extinct at Hope. Head residents are now couples or young singles.

The Afmans' enthusiasm towards being head residents is very evident. Both having been R.A's at Calvin College, they had an idea what being head residents meant.

"My R.A. experience was one of the best of my college years," said Gregg. "With this knowledge, we are trying to make Durfee a positive experience these guys can have in their years at Hope," explained Mary.

The Afmans expressed that living in a dorm is a unnatural situation both for David and them, but when they leave next year "we certainly are going to miss the fun," said Mary.

As head residents, one of their roles can be acting as surrogate parents.

"I get a lot of questions about how to remove stains and how much soap I should use. I especially feel like a mom when I'm baking cookies and the guys smell them and come down to see what's in the oven," Mary said.

The positive experience for Gregg is how he gets to see his students in a different light.

"I see them in the classroom and on a team but now I feel that I can understand them better because I see what they are experiencing in day-to-day living."

Gregg and Mary have been planning many dorm activities—study breaks, a hay ride, dances, and a movie night. The Afmans claim that resident life in Durfee is never dull.

"One month last winter a guy came running to the apartment yelling that the kitchen in Durfee was on fire.

Much to our surprise," informs Mary, "the smoke billowing from the oven was not from a burning pizza but from a pair of boots put in a warm place to dry!"
A man for fall season

by Dick Hoekstra

Who has the best won-lost percentage and has won more Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association (MIAA) titles in one sport than any coach in Hope College history?

If you guessed men’s basketball coach Glenn Van Wieren or football coach Ray Smith, guess again.

With a 71-6 (.922 percent) dual meet record through 1983 and 11 MIAA championships in his 13 years of coaching men’s cross-country, the correct answer is William Vanderbilt, professor of physical education.

How has he been able to achieve such a high degree of success in a sport in which Hope had won only one MIAA title prior to 1971 (a shared crown with Albion in 1953)?

Vanderbilt presents his theory.

“Anytime a team does well there are a lot of variables that enter into the success, but a college coach that’s realistic realizes how important material is—and we’ve had a lot of fine runners in our program here,” he said.

Two of Vanderbilt’s 1984 captains offer additional reasons.

“As a coach, he’s able to bring out the competitive spirit in his athletes without creating unnecessary pressure,” said senior co-captain Scott VandeVorde of Parchment, Mich. “By the very nature of his personality, he generates enthusiasm which makes cross-country an enjoyable sport.”

Much of the fun involved in cross-country at Hope comes back to Vanderbilt’s sense of humor, which extends to every event in life—even the biggest meet of the season. Two years ago, before a Hope runner raced Calvin to determine the league championship, Vanderbilt was quoted in The Anchor as saying, “Any way you slice the banana it’s going to be a wing-ding.” (The meet was a wing-ding as Calvin edged Hope 27-28.)

The topic of bananas brings to mind another example of Vanderbilt’s humor.

Last season, senior Brian Taylor mentioned on a Saturday trip back to Holland from a meet in Carthage, Wis., that his wife would love to make banana bread but that Taylor always ate each bunch of bananas they bought before the fruit became overripe.

The next Monday, Vanderbilt handed a surprised Taylor an unmarked shopping bag filled with overripe bananas.

Masked beneath his sense of humor, Vanderbilt is serious about his coaching and he prepares for each season and individual workout as such.

“He’s on our level and he knows what we need for each meet,” said senior captain Jane Northuis of Grand Haven, Mich. “For instance, if we have a meet coming up on a course with a lot of hills, he’ll have us work out on hills in the week or two before that race.”

“He knows his stuff and he’s well-informed,” she concluded. Both VandeVorde and Northuis added that these enthusiastic and well-informed characteristics transcend Vanderbilt’s coaching techniques to his classroom, administrative, and other tasks as well.

TEACHER/COUNSELOR

Besides teaching courses dealing with the psychology of physical activity and sport and the relationships between sport and culture, Vanderbilt spends approximately 10 hours a week counseling students.

He works with about half of the physical majors, coordinating schedules, advising about the future, writing letters of recommendation, making phone calls to prospective employers, and generally ironing out day-to-day difficulties students come upon.

Not all the students who see Vanderbilt set up appointments. Some just drop in and others he will call in.

“He’s a relationship person,” said colleague Van Wieren. “He has a terrific knack for understanding people and an ability to motivate their thought processes.”

Vanderbilt’s role with the physical education majors has been especially important.

“He’s very interested in the placement of our majors; convincing the really good students to go to graduate school to make the most of their abilities and helping those who want to get jobs in recreation or whatever,” said DeVette.

Vanderbilt coordinates many internships throughout the year for majors as well. For example, he helped set up an internship for VandeVorde with physical therapist Jeff Green in Zeeland because of Scott’s interest in physical therapy as a career.

SPORTS SOCIOLOGIST

Since stepping down as chairperson of the physical education department in 1980 after eight years in that position, some of Vanderbilt’s time has been spent in a new direction: the topic of religion and sport.

He has developed a senior seminar class, written articles for the Church Herald and the Grand Rapids Press, and led discussions at Northwestern College in Iowa and in Sunday school at Holland’s Christ Memorial Reformed Church that deal with the topic.

In a nutshell, Vanderbilt believes the way a Christian behaves in sports competition should be different from his or her non-Christian counterpart.

A Christian, he maintains, should have a healthy attitude toward winning and losing—believing that winning isn’t everything and treating the opposition with respect. Also, the Christian coach should not exploit the athlete by condoning activities against his or her better interests.
Another area Vanderbilt studies is the new role of women in sports, which he can relate to through personal experience because he's coached Hope's women's cross-country team since its inception in 1980. "Being a part of the growth of women's sport and seeing them get the same shake-up men are getting and the same support and encouragement has been exciting for me," he said.

The women's team at Hope receives the same support and encouragement as the men's team, in both principle and practice, because the teams practice together daily and compete in the same meets.

"All being on one team, pushing each other, has made both teams better," he noted. "It's exciting to see men and women, freshmen and seniors, come together into one team—it's a sociology lesson in itself."

In the last year, Vanderbilt has also been completing a book with DeVette on coaching basketball.

DeVette's chapters deal with strategy and fundamentals while Vanderbilt's look into the physiology, history, psychology, and preparation techniques of coaching basketball.

ADMINISTRATOR

In addition to studying topics in sports sociology, Vanderbilt keeps up to date with the latest happenings in physical education around the country.

"He's interested in moving our department ahead by trying to keep us informed with what's going on as a member of AAHPERD (American Alliance for Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance), by sponsoring Phi Epsilon Kappa, the physical education fraternity on campus, and by encouraging faculty members to offer new courses," said DeVette.

The past three years, Vanderbilt also has served as a vice-president of the Division III Cross-Country Coaches Association and will move up to president in November, replacing Tim Hale of the University of Rochester.

In 1981 and 1982, he was second vice-president of the association, a job primarily included putting together a monthly newsletter during cross-country season. Last fall, he moved on to the first vice-presidency which includes attending meetings and scheduling speakers for the Division III Nationals.

In November, he begins a two-year term as president, which involves presiding over meetings and revising the agenda. He will be replaced in 1986 by Nettie Morrison of Pomona-Pitzer, the first woman to hold office in the association. Vanderbilt was selected by his fellow coaches for these positions because of his outstanding leadership as shown in managing the NCAA Great Lakes Regional cross-country meet hosted by Hope in 1980.

"But it wasn't long and we had 15, 20, 25, 30 and now close to 40 runners coming out so that problem took care of itself," he said.

Soon Vanderbilt was enjoying taking the bus out in a different direction each day with his athletes at 3:45. He even ran a portion of their workout with them and still does.

He found through the interaction with his athletes and continued coaching a love of the sport of cross-country and the dedication it demanded—months of training before the season, two hours a day training during the season, and nearly every Saturday—some out of state.

Even with almost 40 people in his squad now, he doesn't look on coaching as a burden. Rather, he looks forward to the fall each year.

Remnants from his dad's bus business add a comic touch as Vanderbilt transports the cross-country team to the country for daily training runs back into town.

A 40-member team represents a lot of people to keep in touch with, but Vanderbilt has his ways.

"Every day when I'm sitting at the wheel of the bus, I make a conscious effort to call each runner by name and say something to him or her," he explained. "When the captains are leading the stretching exercises, I try to move around to kids that have something I know about going on in their lives that I can talk about, especially how they're doing in their courses and how they're getting along with their roommates—the nitty-gritty of things that make or break their experience at Hope."

Vanderbilt discussed how he hopes he's viewed as a coach.

"I'd like athletes to know I care about them as people and that I want the best for them," he said. "Also when the game is over, that there are values that are far greater than winning or losing. I'd like them to see I cared for each person and helped maximize their ability—even if they were down the line or different from the way I was."

THIRTEEN
Exxon exec excerpts experiences

by Mary DeJonge

Dick Kruizenga scoffs at being called "one of Hope College's most successful alumni."

"I simply don't think in those terms," says Kruizenga, vice president of corporate planning for the Exxon Corporation headquartered in New York City.

"If I can define 'success' in terms of the satisfaction I get from my job, my family and my personal life, then I'd call myself 'successful.'"

The road that would eventually lead Kruizenga to fast-paced Manhattan began in the West Michigan town of Spring Lake, 30 minutes north of Holland. Educated at nearby Grand Haven High School, Kruizenga went on to graduate from Hope in 1952 with a B.A. in economics.

The Hope graduate recently spent a day in Holland meeting with College administrators to discuss Hope's upcoming capital fund-raising campaign. Kruizenga will chair the Campaign committee soliciting support from corporations and foundations. Despite a full schedule on his day away from his high-rise office, Kruizenga willingly took time to share some thoughts about his alma mater and his experiences since leaving Hope.

Watching him lean back in his chair and listening to his cool and unhurried talk, one gets the idea that life in the "fast lane" of international business has had a negligible effect on Kruizenga.

Musing over his decision to attend Hope, the corporate executive recalls that he and his siblings "didn't have to go to Hope, but if we didn't, we'd better have had a good reason why not!"

As a Hope undergrad, Kruizenga was unsure what course of study to follow: teaching, science or math. He found economics "challenging and stimulating," and thus concentrated his efforts in that field.

"Hope gave me a broad education and helped me narrow down my choices. Hope helped me focus my attention on what I really wanted to do," he says.

Kruizenga cites former economics professor Dwight P. Yntema as having profound influence on the direction of his studies and career.

"Quite frankly, many students found Professor Yntema's lectures dull and often fell asleep in his class! But I found him a very solid professor," says Kruizenga, who counts Yntema as one of his few "heroes."

Both Yntema and Kruizenga have been awarded Hope's Distinguished Alumnus Award.

After earning his Ph.D. in economics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology under the tutelage of Nobel-prize winning economist Paul Samuelson, Kruizenga taught at M.I.T. for a year before joining the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey (now Exxon Corporation) in 1957.

"I never second-guessed my decision to go into business," says Kruizenga.

"I was interested in applied research instead of just theory. Yet I always expected to go back into teaching."

He never made it back to academia. Instead, Kruizenga moved on to the Humble Oil and Refining Company as the head of their economics department in 1965. At that time Humble was Standard's U.S. operating company.

In 1966 he became the manager of the Economics Department and subsequently chief economist of Standard Oil Company (New Jersey).

Further moves within the Exxon Corporation took Kruizenga and his family to Japan, Australia and Malaysia. He calls his years of living abroad "a tremendous learning experience."

"Living in Tokyo, Sydney and Malaysia taught me that there are more ways of looking at the world than one's own. It was important to me to get inside the culture where we lived and then operate our business in accordance with both that culture's principles and our principles."

Kruizenga calls American business abroad a "good ambassador."

"American business generally has a high reputation abroad," reports Kruizenga. "And it's run more professionally than any other country's business."

Kruizenga describes international business as a "process of partnership" between business and foreign governments who are interested in protecting their interests against the power of the multinationals.

"Although the relationship between a firm and a government is generally one of respect," Kruizenga admits, "that doesn't mean you as a representative of American business are always warmly embraced."

Japanese society intrigued Kruizenga.

"The Japanese culture is tremendously complicated," he explains.

"After one year there I was just beginning to understand it."

Just as Kruizenga was beginning to feel comfortable and effective working in Japan, he moved on to the island continent of Australia.

"As far as living and working goes, Australia was the best place to live," Kruizenga allows. Living in cosmopolitan Sydney with its beautiful climate and good schools for his children, Derek and Meg, he found he was a good fit.

Derek is now with PepsiCo in New York, and Meg is a Bryn Mawr College senior, majoring in history.

Kruizenga smiles when he recalls the considerable differences between living in Australia and Malaysia. He obviously retains much warmth and respect for the Third World nation where in different ways life was exciting and challenging.

"Malaysia is a very independent, rapidly developing country," affirms Kruizenga. He is proud that Exxon's policy is to hire and train Malaysians to work in their own country rather than to import labor.

Kruizenga is sensitive to the needs of both developing nations and business alike. As chairman and chief executive officer of Esso Malaysia Berhad and Esso Production Malaysia Inc., Kruizenga had to pursue the interests of his firm's shareholders within the sometimes differing framework and laws of both the Malaysian and U.S. governments.

"We always tried to interface with the community in positive ways," he says. "Public relations is not a dirty word. Public relations is simply explaining yourself to the community."

Margaret Feldmann Kruizenga '52, Kruizenga's wife, received a master's degree in sociology from Boston University in 1953. According to Kruizenga, although she has not followed a professional career, she has retained an active interest in sociology and anthropology through studying Kruizenga is enthusiastically passionate about Hope's program to "internationalize" its curriculum.

"It is becoming increasingly difficult for Americans desiring employment abroad to find it," he reports. "At the same time the world is coming closer and closer together."

The Exxon Foundation is funding a program to equip Hope's faculty to teach from an international perspective. The program was implemented last spring.

What about business in America and its image here? Kruizenga believes business has a better image today than during the Kennedy and Johnson years.

"Expectations are diminished today," he reports. "Ever since Watergate, expectations of everyone—politicians, civil servants, businessmen—have gone down. There's more reality today, more taking business for it is what it is and what it can do—and less artificial expectations of what it cannot do."

Kruizenga's attitude towards the world energy situation is upbeat.

"The world has become more energy efficient," he suggests, "and we realize energy sources will not be exhausted as soon as we thought a few years ago. We have more time."

"More time" is allowing more careful decisions about alternative energy resources.

"We're not rushing into things anymore," says Kruizenga. "We're moving more deliberately. It's a more positive situation."

Kruizenga's words are salted by frequent references to "challenges" and "opportunities."

As manager of the logistics department for Esso Standard Eastern, Kruizenga's reward came in the actual physical progress he saw in the firm's projects. His position as vice president of corporate planning at Exxon poses its own challenges:

"We try to position our firm in the best position in an unstable market. We face tough problems, and it's tough to win the consensus of all involved about how we should tackle those problems."

Although he is not one to interrupt silence with unnecessary chatter, Kruizenga is emphatic and pointed in his advice to young women and men desiring to enter the world of "big business."

"The most important thing is to get some credentials," he advises. "For me it was a Ph.D. For others it might be an engineering degree or an M.B.A. It will help you get your foot in the door."

"And keep an open mind. Continue to learn. Hope is just a beginning."

"Be flexible. It's difficult to know in advance what options you'll have. So be prepared to act and take risks—sensible risks."

He pauses, searching for a synopsis which comes with the efficiency and impact of a single word: "Try."
Hope is a family affair for these third and fourth generation freshmen.

alumni beat
by Vem Schipper '51
Associate Director of College Relations for Alumni Affairs

"Home on the Faculty" is our Homecoming theme and the Alumni Association will continue to celebrate the "Home on the Faculty" theme throughout the year. Whenever and wherever alumni gather, they comment on how much the faculty of Hope continues to influence them and how much they do for students. It is appropriate for all alumni of Hope to extend their appreciation and support to the faculty and to thank their professors who assure the success of Hope graduates through the quality of their teaching.

A full day of activities made our Homecoming a good time for all. The 1974 and 1975 reunion classes, H-Club and fraternities and sororities had reservations in record numbers. The Student Activities Committee must be thanked for their part in the planning.

The 150th anniversary celebration of the Faculty Association brought together alumni from every era in the history of Hope College. Our thanks go to the Faculty Alumni Committee for planning this event.

The Alumni Art show, which continues throughout the month, is a tremendous success. We hope it's a first and we will be able to schedule other alumni shows in the future. It is an exciting show of art works by 22 artists from across the U.S. Also available in the gallery is "Alumni Opus," a collection of alumni achievements in the literary arts. Jack Wilkes, of the art department and Alumni, has a new show from Hope College editor Eileen Beyer made this first showing possible and they along with the artists deserve our thanks.

Selections from the art exhibit and the literary magazine will appear in a special insert in the December issue of news from Hope College.

Alumni Notre '64 and John Neilson '66 are the owners of the Little Professor Book Center (13 N. Higgins Avenue, Muskegon, Mich. 49442). They write to let us know of the many copies of books authored by Wes Granberg-Michaelson ('A Worldly Spirituality': $13.95, including postage) and Karen Granberg-Michaelson. In the Land of the Living ($5.70, including postage). If interested in those books by Hope alumni, this is a place to order them.

A group of 18 Chicago-area alumni met to plan several events for the greater Chicago-area alumni, parents and friends. This group is chaired by Judy Gross and Dean's Place. As plans are finalized, you will hear from them. Already several persons are attending the fall athletic contests.

These include events and weekend getaways. The schedule of events in news from Hope College and special mailings.

A new Constitution and Bylaws for your Alumni Association is prepared by a special Alumni Board Committee. Their work will be presented to the full membership at the spring meeting, Alumni Day, 1985.

Our Winter Happening is scheduled for Saturday, Feb. 2. Plan to come in the morning for the special academic seminar. Lunch on campus and an afternoon basketball game with Adrian College.

The 1984 Milestone has been mailed to all who registered for the 20th reunion this year, not received, contact the Office of College Relations.

NEWS FROM HOPE COLLEGE, OCTOBER/NOVEMBER 1984

NINETEEN
A new record to set—$750,000 from 6,700 donors. That is the goal of the 1984-85 Annual Alumni Fund. These are the largest goals ever. Over 300 Hope alumni will be involved in the Alumni Fund as Class reps, reunion leaders, promotion leaders and callers.

The Hope College Annual Alumni Fund won another U.S. Steel/CASE award this year, this time for improvement. In three of the last five years Hope has received a U.S. Steel/CASE award.

The 1983-84 Alumni Fund, under the leadership of Marjorie Lucking French '48, surpassed its goal with $675,948 from 6,167 alumni. The class of 1964 raised $33,436—the most money ever received for the Alumni Fund from any class.

All new donors, and donors who increase the amount of their gift to the 1984-85 Alumni Fund, will receive a limited special edition recording—"Christmas Vespers, Volume II." This stereo recording of selections from recent Christmas Vespers has been produced by Hope College’s music department. Due to a limited supply, only one record per donor or alumni couple is being offered. (Please allow six weeks for delivery.)

The looks of Homecoming

A special 1984 theme, "Hats off to Professors," put the Homecoming spotlight on Hope faculty. An 38-17 win over Adrian College on the football field, the crowning of new royalty (Lynette Carlson of Midland, Mich., and Dave Beckman of Shelby, Mich.) and the eighth Run-Bike-Swim were among weekend highlights. Homecoming stories appear on page 5.
