Reunions for Classes of 1966 & 1971

Keeping track of 14,511 Hope alumni is a Gargantuan responsibility.

The task falls on the shoulders of Alumni Assistant Phyllis Kleder '73 and the staff of Development Records office.

Each mailing of a Hope College publication signals an avalanche of address corrections. Approximately 30 per cent of our alumni changed their address last year.

If you are anticipating a change in address we encourage you to let us know before you move. The Postal Service notifies us of address changes, but this generally comes several weeks after you have made your move.

The 1976-77 Alumni Fund campaign surpassed its goal in both donors and dollars! This magazine went to press just as the campaign was ending so the final figures were not tabulated but through June 1 contributions totaled $185,286 against a campaign goal of $170,000. A complete summary will appear in the President's Report issue of the Hope College Magazine in September.

The success of the drive belongs to the several hundred alumni who worked on the campaign as Class Representatives and Phonathon workers.

The Board of Trustees at their Spring meeting adopted a resolution commending National Chairman Jack Hascup '53, members of the Alumni Board and the many volunteers for their leadership in making the 76-77 campaign one of the most successful in the college's history.

To each alumnus who made a contribution to the campaign we say "thanks!"

A feeling of class pride emerged among the Alumni Fund Class Representatives this past year. Each month we provided the Class Reps with a list comparing their class with others in the areas of new donors, total giving by class, percentage of participation, increased giving over last year, etc.

One of the most spirited rivalries surfaced between Reps Ken Faber '58 and Pete Huizenga '60. In 74-75 the class of '58 appeared to be well on their way toward keeping their title with contributions of $3,647. The class of '60, meanwhile, had 95 donors of $2,778.

Donors from the class of '58 were presented frameable certificates designating them members of the "Loyal Order of the Can."

"We can do it!" noted Faber in his Spring letter to his classmates. Through the end of May the class of '58 appeared to be well on their way toward keeping their title with contributions totaling $3,647. The class of '60, meanwhile, had 95 donors of $2,778.

Members of the class of '43 will have a lasting remembrance of the efforts of their Class Rep Harvey Koop. Harvey this spring sent a Colorado blue spruce tree from his Hamilton, Mich. tree farm to every classmate as an incentive to support their alma mater.

This has been a special year for the class of '66 which was welcomed into the Fift Year Circle on Alumni Day. Class Rep Ruth Nibbelink Comstock challenged the class to contribute $7,600 toward the alumni drive in '76. It was a formidable challenge since the class had contributed $4,792 last year. We are pleased to report that through May the '66ers appeared assured of meeting their goal with gifts totaling $6,995.

It just goes to show that you can do it if you try.
How do husband and wife manage to share a decidedly small faculty office with room for little else but two desks placed face-to-face, have only each other to agree or disagree with on departmental matters, and still manage to remain on obviously friendly terms?

"It's Greek to me," one might be tempted to reply. And in the case of Brooks and Nancy Wheeler, assistant professor and lecturer, respectively, in Hope's two-person department of classical studies, it is quite literally Greek—and Latin and all matters related to the study of antiquity. Having woven their courtship through the co-study of these areas of academic interest, the Wheelers' shared vocation presented merely a minor transition. "After having attended classes together for four semesters, teaching together seems quite natural." says Nancy.

The Wheelers admit that the situation is eased somewhat by the fact that they share many attitudes toward their discipline and have similar teaching methods and goals. "When students are asked to evaluate one of us, often they end up referring to 'they' instead of 'he' or 'she,'" observes Brooks. "I guess, at least in students' minds, we are pretty much a unit."

Yet to the casual observer, the unit seems to be made up of two distinct parts. Nancy, who holds the B.A. and M.A. from Indiana University, is relaxed, open, and displays the conversational prowess of a native Hoosier. Her smile is generous, her face a kaleidoscopic variance of expressions to complement her animated gesticulation. Brooks, a native of Boston who holds the B.A. from Dartmouth and the M.A. from Harvard, is more reserved, his facial reactions slight and further masked by a neat, scholarly beard. He speaks infrequently but his comments are almost always marked by a delightfully dry sense of wit.

The twain had its meeting point at the University of Michigan, where both Brooks and Nancy earned their second M.A. degrees in pursuit of the Ph.D. in the mid-'60s. "We met in a Greek class," says Nancy. "Somehow our students always find that hilariously funny or somehow appalling!"

The shared office at Hope came about as pure coincidence. Brooks came to Hope in August, 1968, to be interviewed for a position that needed to be filled by the following month. "They wanted someone primarily to teach Greek," recalls Nancy. "So I just came along for the ride. I was planning to wait in the hall while Brooks was interviewed. Morrie Rider (former Dean of Academic Affairs) said, 'Well don't wait in the hall, I'd like to talk to you too.' So we both talked to him and that was when he learned that we both had the same kind of background. He particularly started asking me many questions when he found out that I knew Latin. He asked if I thought Hope should continue to teach Latin. As always, I was more than ready to talk about that!

The end result was that Dean Rider called several days later not only to offer Brooks the contract: "He said, 'We'd like to hire your wife half-time to teach Latin, too,' " according to Nancy. "So this is how it started—we were just amazed."

Thus, while the "It's Greek to me" colloquialism seems to fit the case of the Wheelers, one should be cautioned not to use the phrase too often within their hearing range—they term it one of their pet peeves, for they believe it expresses the negativism which seems to permeate American attitudes toward the study of classical languages, literature, and thought—i.e., Latin and Greek are "dead" languages, there's little of intrinsic interest in the study of classics; in short, it's all quite incomprehensible and worthless in today's world.

Students, being products of their society, have tended to reflect these attitudes as well. Often, college curriculums have been forced to perpetuate the myth because of low enrollments in classics classes. Brooks and Nancy are both members of the Michigan Classical Conference and the co-edit its official newsletter, Stentor. According to Brooks, to the best of his knowledge, the only private schools in Michigan that have bona fide classics departments are Hope, Calvin College and the University of Detroit. Only about half the schools in the Great Lakes Colleges Association offer the classics major.

Yet, the classical studies department at Hope is reasonably healthy, especially in recent years. According to the Wheelers, this is most strongly due to the fact that shortly after they came to Hope the departmental curriculum was redesigned to include a major in Ancient Civilization, as well as majors in Latin and in Classics. "In the past, if a student wanted to learn about antiquity, the only road was to become a classics major," says Nancy. "None of the courses offered the literature in translation. We added the Ancient Civilization major for students with strong interest who still didn't want to take the time away from some other studies to spend the time required to learn Greek and Latin well. To get to the point where you can read these languages with some sort of facility takes a lot of years. For most of us, if we're honest, we admit that we never really got to that point until we were in graduate school. And there are some writers who remain so difficult that you never get to that stage—they remain a challenge no matter how many times you've read them."

The strength of Hope's department is further bolstered by the fact that a good proportion of Hope students have an interest in the New Testament and the desire to read it in the original Greek, say the Wheelers. They add that it also doesn't hurt their cause that Western Theological Seminary has continued to require a background in Greek, while many other seminaries have made this nonessential for admission.

According to several Hope students, the strength of Hope's department of classical studies is also due to the attitudes and teaching methods of the Wheelers. "They're just great," says one coed. "They give you so much personal attention. Of course," she acquiesces. "how many students do you find in Latin IV?"

Certainly in the upper level language courses, the numbers remain small. However, in the courses which make up the curriculum for the ancient civilization major—courses of literature in translation, history, and classical thought—the enrollment is sometimes surprisingly high. Last semester, over 40 students studied classical mythology, a course introduced and taught by Nancy Wheeler until this past semester when Dean for the Humanities Jacob Nyenhuis, whose academic background is in the field of classics, taught the class.

Trends at Hope reflect what seems to be a general resurfacing of interest in Greek across the country.

"There seems to be a general increase of interest in religion among students," says Brooks. "In talking with people in schools that are not church affiliated, they remark about the number of people who are taking Greek because they want to read the New Testament. The phenomenon is not limited to a school like Hope."

"There's also a great deal of interest in archeology, which has been prompted to a great extent by magazines like National Geographic," adds Nancy. "That is combined with the fact that college students are coming to learn that when they try to do something in reading, particularly in English literature, they realize that there's a great deal that they don't understand because they haven't had the background in the classics to prepare them for it."

Yet, the study of Latin remains less popular. "I think that part of it is that the Greeks seem so much more like ourselves," says Nancy. "If you read Greek literature, you get the feeling that these people are very modern, they seem to have ideas that are so compatible with modern ideas. Whereas the Romans—and it's strange because they've had so much influence on our civilization—seem much more foreign in their literature and thinking. Their literature seems highly artificial in some ways... Also, particularly today, I think that the Romans' ideas seem very patriotic. There is much preaching of devotion to fatherland, devotion to duty, praising of military glory and exploits on the field of battle. Most modern students can't identify with this at all.

"Yet, I feel that a liberal arts college should not eliminate either Latin or Greek from its curriculum," she continues. "The classics are so much the basis of the whole tradition of the humanities. It would seem almost a denial of the tradition of a liberal arts college to eliminate these things. While I realize that Latin, in particular, doesn't have the appeal that Greek has, I still think that the study of it has validity. I think it's showing up nowadays in the low S.A.T. scores of students, particularly low verbal scores. There are more and more people wondering whether perhaps the reason these scores were higher 10 and more years ago was because more students then had a language background, and specifically a Latin background."

Because of this strong belief in the validity of the study of classics, the Wheelers' enthusiasm runs high. "I guess we see our primary goal as being to instill some of our enthusiasm in our students," says Nancy. "We feel that if a student comes away from one of our courses with the feeling that these things are worthy of study and have some intrinsic interest, we're happy with that."

"Enthusiasm for any teacher is something that's basic," Brooks adds. "I guess we just have to try a little harder to convey this than teachers in other disciplines might have to."

Once the Wheelers lock up their office door for the day and leave the campus, the similarity of interests becomes less apparent. Their home near Lake Michigan seems to provide the solitude necessary for each to pursue their own personal pastimes. Brooks plays the piano. Nancy watches over her collection of old pewter.

But move into the kitchen now. She measures and stirs, he slices and chops. Are they wrapping meat in grape leaves, preparing moussaka perhaps? Any myths that the Wheelers are utter classical purists dissipate as they sit down to dine—most often, their repasts consist of pasta. Not exactly food for the gods, but another of the Wheelers' shared penchants nonetheless.
Sylvia Huxtable Tweedle: A One-Woman War on Deafness

On February 18, 1976, the board of directors of the Portland (Ore.) Center for Hearing and Speech renamed and dedicated one of the rooms of their facility to honor an individual who had been continuously associated with the Center longer than any other person. The event marked the first time in the Portland Center's 54-year history that a living person had been so honored. A plaque in the room pays tribute to Sylvia Huxtable '38 Tweedle and her more than 30 years of dedicated service to the Portland Center for Hearing and Speech.

The event by no means marked the end of Mrs. Tweedle's service to the institution. One of her colleagues, Dr. David DeWeese, describes Mrs. Tweedle's ongoing career as "an example of community service at its best."

Mrs. Tweedle's career is an example of something else, as well. In July, she will present a paper on the psychology of deafness at a meeting of the International Congress of Psychologists to be held at the Sorbonne in Paris. The paper's thesis is that "the psychology of the deaf is really acceptance of what is left," according to Mrs. Tweedle. An excerpt from the paper reads: "The 'aggressive' hearing handicapped person is one who learns to read the lips and wears a hearing aid; in short, attempts to remove as much of the handicap as possible before compensating for it."

Mrs. Tweedle's career bespeaks of the fruits of such aggression.

Sylvia Huxtable Tweedle was born in Zeeland, Mich., and attended local schools. She had some difficulty with hearing from her early childhood. Possible academic difficulties were compensated for by sitting in the front row and reviewing the notes of friends. After graduation from high school, she attended Michigan State Normal College for approximately six months and studied lip reading. In September, 1931, she enrolled at the University of Michigan, where she studied for two years. The large lecture classes of the university presented difficulties and during this period Sylvia began wearing a hearing aid which she describes as "more like a suitcase or a camera than a hearing aid as we know it today."

While working for a brief time in a Zeeland law office, she began teaching her first lip reading classes for adults in the Zeeland-Holland area under the Economic Recovery Act of the Roosevelt administration.
In 1935 she again enrolled in college, this time choosing Hope, where she found that the smaller classes and individual attention of professors enabled her to minimize the difficulties her hearing loss presented. Metta Ross '26, retired professor of history, remembers Sylvia during her college days: "She sat directly in front of my desk. She read lips very well and I wasn't aware of her hearing difficulty until she told me of it. She had a sense of great determination about her, even then, although her personality was more withdrawn than in later years. She was utterly committed to the idea that she was going to make a place for herself in the world."

Sylvia graduated in 1938 with the B.A. degree in the top quarter of her class.

After graduation and until 1943, she taught in the Michigan School for the Deaf at Flint, Mich., and took graduate courses at both the Michigan Normal School and the University of Michigan.

In 1943 she moved to Santa Barbara, Calif. and for the next year, she was a teacher of war-deafened soldiers, under the American Red Cross War Department. The following year she did classified work for the War Department in San Francisco.

During this period, Sylvia made an appointment with a Los Angeles doctor who deemed her a good candidate for a fenestration operation. Sylvia recalls the experience: "As a student in Ann Arbor, I was told that with my mixed (hearing) loss, an operation was not advisable. I did not believe this. An old acquaintance of mine, the late Frances Warfield, in her book Cotton In My Ears, expressed clearly what all of us with a hearing handicap hope for: some day, somehow, we are going to 'hear the grass grow'.

"I was extremely dizzy and nauseated after the surgery. Lying there, trying not to turn my head suddenly, I heard clearly for the first time in many years. The door to my room was closed, but I heard voices and speech, and sudden laughter, and the sound of carts and stretchers being wheeled down the hall. Sick, dizzy—it was all worth it. For finally, come spring, when the green returned to the earth, I would really hear the grass grow! Then an infection set in, and I lost all I had gained, and much, much more. Now instead of a hearing loss, I was profoundly deaf."

It was at this point that Sylvia reckoned with what was later to become the thesis of her paper—that the psychology of the deaf is really acceptance of what's left, that this psychology is actually more a philosophy—"something by which we can live," says Sylvia. "I never fully accepted my hearing problem until I had the unsuccessful surgery and had to face the fact that my hearing would never get better. In all probability it was going to get worse. I had to learn to use every bit of residual hearing while I still had some to train."

In 1945, she was attracted to Portland and to the position of executive director of the Portland League for the Hard of Hearing (the predecessor of the Portland Center for Hearing and Speech). As only the second individual to hold this position, Sylvia saw the society go through its early strengthening stages. "We had to stretch our budget of $5000 to meet our needs," she recalls. She served not only as director, but also as audiologist, teacher of both adult and children's lip reading classes, teacher of the deaf, recreation director, auditor, and public relations expert.

Hearing aid consultation services were established and recreational activities were arranged in cooperation with the Portland recreation department. Preschool classes for deaf children were inaugurated and expanded to include a parent education program. These classes were the nucleus of what later developed of the Center, while continuing her duties as editor of Hearsay. "It's an ideal job for me, with my wish to write and to scribble," she says. "I am thinking, but not very much, of retirement." (Sylvia is 63 years old.)

Her 31 years with the Portland Center have given her many memories. For example, there’s Bobby Warr, the 17-month old who was diagnosed as profoundly hard of hearing. At 20 months, Bobby walked into the Portland Center and met his preschool teacher, Mrs. Tweedle. A feature in a 1967 edition of Imprint (University of Oregon Medical School publication) described the encounter: "This remarkable teacher who is very hard of hearing herself, though you would never know it, is a soft-spoken, one-woman-war on deafness. She has led hundreds and hundreds of children out of the world of silence...pushed them, prodded, coaxed, literally boosted them up and over that high, blank wall that separates the mute from the articulate.

"Now she went to work on Bobby, that quiet, doe-eyed little boy, age 22 months now, and newly-fitted with a hearing aid."

It was a long struggle. When Bobby was 4½ he was not able to say more than 10 words, although he was ready to be transferred to the Hosford School for the Deaf. But he had been learning—within a year, all Sylvia’s skilful lessons paid off when the pieces of the puzzle of communication fit together for Bobby and his vocabulary increased rapidly. According to the Imprint feature, by 6½ years, he had become Robert Warr—"a successful young man."

It’s little wonder that when asked how many children she has, Sylvia often responds, "I have hundreds of children—all deaf."

Little wonder, as well, that she says: "When a mother says to me, 'But Lisa can't hear a thing,' I reply that it doesn't make that much difference. My mother said the same thing 50 years ago about her daughter.

"I think I can say, quite frankly, that I will always regret the fact that I had to live my life as a deaf person," she continues. "But I will never let it defeat me."

Perhaps Sylvia Huxtable Tweedle has never heard the grass grow. But her life shows that she has made certain that none of that grass is likely to have grown under her feet.
Two members of the class of 1926 were seen wandering around the lower level of the DeWitt Cultural Center before their Induction Into the 50-Year Circle. Slight envy showed in their faces as they surveyed the bowling alleys, ping-pong tables, and game areas. "They sure have it a lot better than we did," one said. "But even so, we were the best class to ever graduate from this place!" he quickly added.

This year's Alumni Day (May 8) again gave members from many of Hope's "best ever" classes to congregate for a day of reminiscing, updating, and the renewal of friendships. Needless to say, Mother Nature had no choice but to supply sunshine for such an illustrious group!

The classes of '26, '31, '36, '41, '46, '51, '56, '61, and the Fifty Year Circle met for class reunions and buffets, following coffee and registration at the Alumni House.

The Alumni Association met in the DeWitt Cultural Center Theatre, with President Jack Hascup '53 presiding.

Alumni Board member Warren Kane '57 discussed the proposed revisions in the Alumni Association Constitution (presented in the Winter '75 issue of the Hope College Magazine). The revised constitution was unanimously approved by the association.

Percy Kinkema '25 invited the class of 1926 into the Fifty Year Circle. James Ver Meulen '26, president of his class, responded by noting that while the class was an unusually enthusiastic, close-knit group, they accepted the invitation.

Seventy-eight members (66%) of the class of 1926 were inducted into the Fifty Year Circle. President Van Wylen presented the certificates and the 50-year pins.

President Van Wylen spoke briefly to the association. He announced plans for a Build Hope Fund victory celebration to be held during 1976 Homecoming, and expressed his deep gratitude to all who had participated in the fund drive.

The election of officers of the 50 Year Circle resulted in John Ver Beek '26 being named president. Marion Pennings '26 was elected vice president and Marian Van Vessum '25 Steggerda was named secretary-treasurer.

Highlighted the events was the annual Alumni Day Dinner. Attendance numbered 622, breaking all previous records.

Jack Hascup presented J. Norman Timmer '38, retiring development officer, with a resolution of appreciation adopted by the Alumni Board to honor his service to the College.

Dr. Everett Kleijnans '43, Mrs. Betty Smith '31 Becker, and Dr. Harold Leestma '39 were presented the 1976 Distinguished Alumni Awards.

Dr. Kleijnans, in taking the podium, related an incident from his undergraduate days when he was 21 years of age and expecting to be drafted shortly. Kleijnans confessed that a physics course he was taking with former Prof. Clarence Kleis had seemed unimportant. The semester drawing to a close, Prof. Kleis had called young Kleijnans into his office and told him that, while he deserved an "F" grade, he would be receiving an incomplete. At the time this had seemed immaterial, Kleijnans said, as he didn't expect to return to Hope the next year. However within a few weeks he received a deferment notice from his draft board—because he was a physics and math major. "If I had received what I had deserved from Clarence Kleis, I wouldn't be here today," Kleijnans said, adding that this human encounter on a horizontal level was the same as an encounter with God on a vertical level—acceptance although being unacceptable. "This is what gives us the power for a new start," he concluded.

Mrs. Becker exclaimed, "I still don't know why I'm standing here, when I think of all the illustrious people who have received this award!" She related the words of a friend who said one should never be embarrassed when receiving a compliment, but rather one should simply smile and say, "God has been good to me." Mrs. Becker received the award on her birthday, and all alumni present joined in singing the Happy Birthday Chorus.
Prior to Dr. Leestma's receiving his award, a congratulatory Mallgram from his pastorate church, the Lake Hills Community Church, was read. Dr. Leestma said that he was grateful to Hope for three reasons. First, "Hope gave me a purpose," he said. Second, he related that he made his surrender to God at Hope during his junior year. "Finally, Hope gave me a person and the beginning of a partnership that's always been beautiful," he said in reference to his wife, the former Lois Voorhorst '39.

The Program closed with the presentation of a tribute to the late Dr. Robert W. Cavanaugh, professor of music and director of the Chapel Choir for 36 years. Prof. Roger J. Rietberg '47 presented the resolution of commemoration to Mrs. Florence Cavanaugh on behalf of the Alumni Board.

All present then stood to sing the Hope College Alma Mater Hymn, the words and music of which were written by Dr. Cavanaugh.

CURB-SIDE ENTERTAINMENT: John Ver Steeg '65 needed a little assistance in retrieving the keys he had locked inside his car.

Jim Ver Meulen '26 (left), Class President, accepts the invitation to join the 50-Year Circle from its president, the Rev. Percy Kinkema '26. The Class of 1926 showed exceptional enthusiasm for the event, with 86 per cent of its members participating in the induction ceremony.

ALUMNI DAY
Class '76 of 1946
COMMENCEMENT 1976

Degrees were awarded to 435 graduating Hope College seniors on May 9 during the 111th annual commencement exercises. The College also conferred an honorary Doctor of Science degree upon Dr. Judson Van Wyk '43, who has distinguished himself as a pediatric endocrinologist, researcher and teacher at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine at Chapel Hill.

The traditional baccalaureate service was held in Dimnent Memorial Chapel with the Rev. R. W. Stott delivering the address on the topic "The Marks of Christian Leadership." Rev. Stott, Rector Emeritus of All Souls with St. Peter's Church in London, is an internationally known pastor, lecturer, and writer. Claiming that there is a dearth of Christian leadership in the world today, Rev. Stott said that humanity, faced with the magnitude of contemporary problems, has become "like sheep without a shepherd." He emphasized that leaders are both born and self-made, and that all have the ability and the responsibility to cultivate the gifts of leadership in some potential.

The speaker maintained that vision is of primary importance for leaders. He defined this vision as "a deep dissatisfaction with what is, and a clear grasp of what could be."

The second mark of leadership must be industry, he said. "The hard work of the man of action must be added to vision, in order that vision may become practical reality."

Perserverance is also a necessary quality for leaders because the inevitable opposition to vision must be faced and conquered, said Rev. Stott. "The work of God thrives on opposition, for through opposition its silver is refined and its gold is hardened."

Service is the mark that distinguishes the leadership of the Christian from that of the world, he continued, for Christians recognize the intrinsic worth of all humans. "There can be no Christian leadership without joyful and humble service," he said.

Finally, Christian leaders must bear the mark of discipline, especially regarding their own personal devotional life, said Rev. Stott. "The Christian leader knows his weaknesses, knows the burdens of his task, but he also knows the grace of God."

The speaker concluded by emphasizing that one of man’s greatest enemies is the temptation to accept mediocrity. "Don't settle for less than your God-given potential," he advised the graduating seniors. "Each of you is unique. Therefore, God has a unique role for each of you."

Presiding over the Baccalaureate service was President Gordon J. Van Wylen. Prof. Lambert J. Ponstein was Altarist. The 1976 Chapel Choir sang together for the final time under the direction of Prof. Roger Rietberg '47.

Dr. James Malcolm, Dean for the Performing and Fine Arts and professor of theatre, was chosen by the graduating class to deliver the commencement address. Dr. Malcolm noted that the '50s have been labelled as "The Beat Generation" (defined by the speaker as "a movement of young people alienated from and aligned against the values of a conventional society") and that the '60s have come to be known as "The Instant Generation" ("A new generation turned from mere criticism of society to radical attempts to cure all the diseases on earth—right now"). Recognizing that it is still too early to know exactly where the present decade is heading, Dr. Malcolm offered his own generalized impression:

The seventies began, I think, with the sad awareness that the world cannot be cured—not now, not ever. There is no eschatological hope hidden within the structures of society itself," he said.

"If that is true, if the institutions of society cannot be changed, then at least, students conclude, they should concentrate on preserving themselves."

The quest for self-preservation has taken two forms, according to Dr. Malcolm. The first is what he described as "the hunger of Eden, the need to escape to a place where the self is preserved from a polluted world."

He noted that this flight takes many forms, including the return-to-the-land movement, transcendental meditation, astrology, mysticism, and occultism.

The quest for self-preservation is also expressed through an opposing flight—an attempt to escape to what the speaker termed "the City, with all that implies of industry, commerce, business, services of every kind."

"All of life's dangers come in pairs...," said Dr. Malcolm. "While struggling to avoid one danger we become the victims of the other, and the way to safety is to avoid the extremes on either side."

"When you chose four years ago to come to Hope College, you must have known that...," he said. "You were looking for, and I hope you have found here, the beginning of a way between Eden and the City, a way to practical mysticism. Because there really is an Eden where we can improvise and play like children. And there is City where we must work like grown-ups. But they are not separate from each other."

Noting that some of the graduates were already assured of successful careers in chosen professions, Dr. Malcolm said: "I hope for your sake that you will remember that it is not enough to have work and to have money, without the life of the spirit as well— those vestiges from Eden of beauty, of creativity, of human efforts to restore lost goodness which we find in the humanities and the liberal arts."

Also noting that other graduates were uncertain of exactly what the future held for them, Dr. Malcolm said: "To you I would say that you are still better off for having come here. Because there is no vocational training anywhere which is a guarantee against future change. For all the uncertainty right ahead of you, you are better prepared to improvise excitement and interest around the ordinary and the routine, and better prepared to recognize and seize the moment when your mind and spirit find the right work to do."

pool, conditioning and exercise areas, a dance studio, handball courts, wrestling and multipurpose rooms, classrooms and health clinics. The new center will replace Carnegie-Schouten gymnasium which was built in 1906 when the college had an enrollment of 400 students. Enrollment at Hope last year was 2,275.

SYMPHONETTE TOURS ISLES

The 28 member Hope College Symphonette toured the British Isles during May.
It was the first trans-Atlantic tour for the 23 year old organization which is under the direction of Dr. Robert Ritsema, professor of music.
Members of the Symphonette engaged in fund-raising projects throughout the school year to finance their tour.
The Symphonette had a taping session at the London studios of the BBC, a broadcast which will be heard nationwide. Other London appearances included concerts at the St.
Olave Hart Church and at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. The Symphonette also performed in Canterbury at the Cooper Center recital hall, and in Coventry at the magnificent Covenent Cathedral.
After spending time in Oxford and Stratford, the Symphonette travelled to York, where they presented a concert at the Castle Howard.
They also presented two concerts in Edinburgh, Scotland.

POLICY REAFFIRMED

Hope’s student-faculty Campus Government System this spring reaffirmed the College’s existing regulation which prohibits the use of alcohol on campus. Earlier in the academic year, channels of Student Congress presented an opposing challenge, based primarily on the issue of the rights to individual privacy. The Campus Life Board studied the implications of the proposal. President Van Wylen voiced his opinion in the midst of these deliberations in the form of a letter which was also printed in the anchor in February. The following month the Campus Life Board voted in support of the College’s existing policy. A synopsis of the President’s statement follows:

President Van Wylen based his reservations on several general observations. First, he established his view that the use or non-use of alcohol is in itself not a matter of right or wrong, but rather a matter for individual decision. Yet, dependence on or excessive use of alcohol does have implications for Christian faith and commitment, the President said. He emphasized that ours is an age of considerable stress and that dependence on alcohol is often a response to these pressures.
These general observations were related to Hope’s situation as Dr. Van Wylen pointed out that the college years present considerable stress and are, to a certain degree, years of transition from home to life as an individual.
He also noted that campus residence halls create a fairly close environment, and that the actions of one person therefore affect others.
The President stated that Hope, as a Christian liberal arts institution, believes that education has implications for man’s total being—mind, body, and soul. Therefore, the experiences in the residence halls must be viewed as a vital part of the education Hope offers.
The President’s specific reasons for his support of the existing no-alcohol policy were stated as follows:

1. I believe that this policy, among all other alternatives available, will best promote the development and maintenance of a supportive, concerned academic community. One of the distinguished characteristics of Hope over the years has been that it is such a community.

2. I believe that this policy best prevents easy dependence upon alcohol among our students.

3. I further believe this policy best promotes the development of an environment where we can achieve our overall goals with a real degree of excellence. I am convinced that our academic goals, our programs in intramural and intercollegiate sports, theater, and music will be more fully accomplished if we maintain our present policy of prohibiting the consumption of alcohol in the residence halls.

4. Many different decisions, made over many years, have gone into making Hope the academic institution and community it is today. It is impossible to determine the full significance of any single decision which has been made in the past, or to fully ascertain the future impact of a decision we make today.

Yet, we are called upon to estimate, as accurately as we can, the consequences of the decisions we make today. It is my conviction that the proposed change in policy regarding consumption of alcohol in the residence halls would significantly change, and not for the better, the character of the college. This would not be an immediate change, but rather one which would evolve over the years, and make its impact upon the goals, the personnel of the college, and nature of our community.

As regards the issue of individual privacy, the President said that the College’s policies are clearly stated in materials sent to prospective students. “A student who decides to come to Hope and live in the residence halls has a right to individual privacy is within the context of his argument on a violation of his individual privacy.”

Hope ended fifth in the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association all-sports race this past year.

Kalamazoo College won the all-sports trophy for a record fifth straight year, edging Alma 73-72. Next were Calvin 68, Albion 58, Hope 57, Olivet 35 and Adrian 33.

The Dutchmen led the all-sports race after fall competition, but slipped to third after winter play and then to fifth at the end of the spring.

The baseball team finished third in the MIAA (7-4) and with an overall 15-12 record.

Three Hope players were named to the all-conference baseball team. Freshman Terry Lock of Grand Rapids, Mich., was named the league’s top first baseman, sophomore Craig Van Assen of Grand Rapids earned the honor at second base and junior Jeff Waterstone of Livonia, Mich., was one of three outfielders recognized.

Senior pitcher Dan Van Pernis of Grand Rapids, and sophomore designated hitter Mike Wojda of Alpena, Mich., were named to the league’s second team.

The track team finished last in the MIAA standings for the first time in the college’s history. The Dutchmen were sixth among seven teams on MIAA Field Day, but failed to win any league dual meets.

Seniors Jim Wildgen of Muskegon and Stu Scholl of Montague repeated as MIAA track allstars. Wildgen jumped a league record 6-8¾ in winning the high jump and placed second in pole vault while Scholl won the three mile run in an MIAA record 14:26.0. Earlier in the season Scholl ran the three mile in a school record 14:17.6.

Wildgen earned All-American honors for the second time in his collegiate career by finishing in a tie for fourth place at the NCAA Division III national meet. He was also among the finalists in the pole vault.

The men’s tennis team finished fifth in the league, winning only one of six conference dual meets. The Dutchmen were 4-11 overall.

SCHOLARSHIP GRANT
The Charles E. Merrill Trust has awarded Hope College a $20,000 grant to be used for scholarships.

The grant has been designated to be used for scholarships for deserving students of congregations of the Reformed Church in America. Two previous scholarship grants of $20,000 each were awarded Hope College by the Trust in 1969 and 1971.

"One of the primary needs at Hope College continues to be identifying additional sources of financial aid for our students," said President Van Wylen.

"This gift is especially timely and appreciated because it will enable us to extend our commitment to be of service to the children of Reformed Church congregations."

Approximately 72 per cent of the students enrolled at Hope this past academic year received some form of financial aid.

MARRIAGE ENRICHMENT...
A Discussion of Philosophies and Goals

Del and Trudy are the parents of Dave '76 and Tim '74 VanderHaar.

In a recent interview, the VanderHaars discussed their philosophies regarding marriage and some of the goals of the marriage enrichment programs they have led in various Reformed Church congregations.

Q. Describe briefly your program and point out what you feel to be its particular strong points:

Del: “The Marriage Enrichment Program is intended to provide ways by which couples can develop intimacy in marriage. Intimacy in marriage covers many facets—intellectual, emotional, recreational, sexual, etc. Just getting married is a simple act, but becoming partners in a caring relationship is a lifelong challenge. The tragedy is that many couples really never develop the ‘we feeling,’ the oneness that comes about when two persons accept each other as persons and seek the growth of the other as a person in mutual respect and dedication.”

Trudy: “Many married couples in society live at a very superficial level and never really discover the oneness that God intended for marriage. This is true for many couples who are a part of the Christian community. They have never been taught how to share their own ‘soul’ so to speak, or to be completely open with each other, believing that their spouse is not their enemy but their best friend.”

Del: “In a study of marriage communications for a period of 10 years, it was discovered that the average couple spends only 27 minutes a week communicating on important matters. Marriage enrichment is intended to help couples discover new skills so that they can begin to communicate at a deeper level. Such skills as learning to identify the other person’s feelings, or how to make a request for change, or how to solve problems, or how to handle conflict are taught.

Q. What constitutes a healthy marriage?

Del: “The Church is at the center of this task of enriching marriages. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is primarily a relational Gospel. It tells how persons may be right with God and with one another. It brings a profound understanding to persons about who they are, what is love, what is forgiveness, and encourages the practice of all the fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control.

The Church ought to be a supportive community where people may feel free to express their pains and in return receive healing, understanding and acceptance. For too long the church has held to such high ideals regarding marriage that couples have been reluctant to acknowledge that their marriage has gotten into a rut and that not all their expectations have been met. Let the church be the first to remind couples that there are no perfect marriages because there are no perfect people. We are always ‘becomers’ as members of the body of Christ and this includes the marital relationship. So the church should set couples free to acknowledge their needs and at the same time encourage them to work with God’s help on making their marriage everything God intended it to be—a warm, loving, caring, forgiving, supportive relationship.”

Q. Do you encounter opposition to your programs?

Trudy: “There is not so much opposition as there is resistance to the concept of marriage enrichment. Many couples feel that to tell your friends you’re going to attend a Marriage Enrichment Weekend is to admit problems in your own marriage. Somehow we have left married couples with the idea that as soon as you’re married you automatically get it together and there is perfect bliss henceforth and forevermore. Now everyone knows this is not true, but we’re not willing to admit this as yet to our friends or parents. We need to underscore that no marriage is ever in a static relationship, for either it is growing in intimacy or it is likely to be degenerating. Without some serious intentional effort, more marriages are likely to degenerate than to grow. To help couples overcome this resistance we often use the statement: ‘No marriage is so good that it can’t be better, or so bad that it can’t be worse.’ So who doesn’t need help for enrichment in marriage?”

Del: “The other factor that creates resistance is also fear that you will be forced to divulge some deep secret or ghost that has been dormant in the closet for several months or years. We do not force couples to share in the group any more than they feel comfortable in sharing. Most of the confidential sharing will be done between couples by themselves, and then if there is something from the couple’s dialogue which they want to share with the total group, we do provide opportunity for this. But even in this sharing we emphasize that we are all working together to enrich our marriages and what is related in the group is confidential. When a high trust level develops, couples are often willing to share with the group and work at overcoming barriers in marriage.”

Trudy: “We have discovered that the best way to overcome such resistance is for couples who have attended to tell others what it has meant in their marriages. Ninety-nine percent of the couples participating will gladly tell that it has enriched their marriages. Of course, we also seek to emphasize that this is for enriching marriages, and is not therapy for couples who have deep-rooted problems.”

Q. What constitutes a healthy marriage? Are there forces in modern-day life which you feel present real threats to marriage?

Del: “What constitutes a healthy marriage? That is almost like asking the $64,000 question. The answer to this question really depends on one’s definition of marriage, or on one’s own need and expectations from marriage. We feel that at times we have..."
expected much more of marriage than it is able to deliver. One ought not to expect that all self-fulfillment or sense of self-worth should come through marriage.

"Yet on the other hand, if we're going to reach out for the greatest potential possible in marriage relationship, there is the need for a rather idealistic concept of marriage. Here is where the Christian faith helps us because it does hold to some rather high expectations in relationship to marriage. It was Paul who said that 'the love between husband and wife ought to be like the love Christ had for the Church.' What a high standard! When couples begin to possess such love they are able to move away from the 'mine and thine' attitude to a 'we' feeling. This enables a spouse to begin to think about how can I grow and change in order to effect change and growth in my spouse, and together have a better relationship.

"For us, marital health demands such deep love, faith, and commitment to each other so that from it may flow intimacy in communication, the self-fulfillment of the other, mutual goals for life, a trust that accepts differences and develops the ability to accept disagreements comfortably with a commitment to work on a team solution. All this takes a large measure of maturity and Christian grace. However, we had better recognize that in the process of working toward this, we will never fully attain such a perfect relationship on earth, or what we might call total marital health. This only emphasizes the need for couples to develop some specialized skills which will enable them to move along toward a greater measure of marital health.

"Trudy: 'There is much in our highly technological society that competes with the Biblical concepts of marriage. As a result, we have heard rather extensively about trial marriages, open marriages or group marriages, serial monogamy. Each new marriage form is trying to find a depth of relationship which persons in our society seek and need.

"More than anything else in life, people want a deep, meaningful, trusting, safe, loving, nourishing relationship with another human being. This is evident by the fact that about 85% of those who divorce remain in marriage three years or less. If this is what people really treasure, then ought we to be a new and serious attempt to enable people to discover this within the traditional marriage experience. That's really what marriage enrichment is all about—teaching people how to find intimacy in marriage.

"A lead article in The Ladies Home Journal, January, 1976, entitled, 'Old Fashioned Marriage is Back in Style,' says, 'Young people today don't see marriage as an escape into adulthood. It gives them an opportunity to make a covenant, rather than a contract. Marriage is flourishing again because people need a place—a secure and peaceful place—from which to face a brutal world. So the trend is back to the more traditional marriage and there needs to be discovered ways to make it work better.'

Q. What are the effects of the women's movement on marriage?

Trudy: "The evolution of the women's liberation movement no doubt has an immense effect on marriage. We may not know the full impact for several years. Currently, the effort of woman to break out of her cocoon to a new freedom and growth experience changes her role in marriage. Hopefully, she will not altogether do this without maintaining a basic commitment to the marriage and the family. The liberation effect on marriage relationship is already today because the demands of society are different from what they were upon our parents. The women's liberation may also lead to a new form of selfishness which causes individuals to think in terms of 'mine' and 'thine' rather than upon the 'us' in marriage. However, it is our belief that if couples know what they need and want from marriage, they will be able to deal creatively with the changes that evolve as a result of pressures from society via the women's movement."

Q. What can be done to prepare couples for marriage?

Del: "When young people have lived nearly 19 or 20 years with poor marriage modeling by their parents, it is extremely difficult to know how to prepare them for higher and better expectations from marriage. They know that they don't want what they saw demonstrated all those years by their parents, but they don't know how to get something different. Currently we're working on a Pre-Marriage Education Model that would enable young people during courtship and engagement years to learn some of the same skills that are being taught in the Marriage Enrichment experience. Many couples who have participated in a Marriage Enrichment Weekend have said, 'We wish that we would have had this kind of help in the first year of marriage.' With the use of the Taylor-Johnson Temperament Analysis Test and other pre-marital inventories, we hope to be able to clarify how each person sees the other and what expectations each may have of the other in marriage. Let's recognize that those of us were ill-prepared to be good marriage partners, and that marriage preparation much more seriously than we have done in the past. Actually, there ought to be a high commitment on the part of a church-related College, like Hope College, to see that such a service is provided for all its students, and that course credit is granted. (Editor's note: Hope Chaplain Dr. William Hillekmonds and his wife lead voluntary test sessions for couples planning to be married.)

"We have even a larger dream for marriage and family life preparation than pre-marriage education for engaged couples. Often times, this is far too late to change concepts and behavior that has already been formed. We believe that every church in its Church School should be sought to expose all its children and teen-aged youth to basic family life concepts.

"If marriage is ever going to meet the basic need for intimacy in life, much more needs to be done by way of marriage preparation as well as teaching of new relational skills to married couples. Nevertheless, we are thankful that for just such a time as this there is a merger of renewal in the Church and the use of behavioral skills which is enabling many couples to find greater fulfillment in marriage."

ALUMNI DIRECTORS ELECTED

The Alumni Board elected two new directors at their spring meeting in May. Walter J. Boerman '49, M.D., is the new representative from the Grand Rapids, Mich. chapter and Gwen DeBoer, a Hope senior from Midland, Mich. was elected as the Class of 1977 representative.

Dr. Boerman has been practicing medicine in Grand Rapids since shortly after his discharge from the Air Force in 1959. He received his advanced degree from the University of Michigan Medical School in 1964 and interned for a year at Grand Rapids' St. Mary's Hospital. During his service in the Air Force he was stationed for two years at the Davis-Monthan AFB Hospital in Tucson, Ariz. During this time he also took flight surgeon's training at Randolph Field in Texas.

Dr. Boerman has been involved in area Hope Phonathons and is a member of his class reunion committee. He is married to the former Betty Boelkins '49.

Miss DeBoer is a philosophy major. She has been active in Student Congress, is a member of Alpha Beta Beta, biology honor society, and was tapped by Mortar Board this spring. She also competed on the women's track team. Miss DeBoer is planning a career in either philosophy or medicine.

Dr. Boerman replaces Gene C. Campbell '51, who completed his second three-year term this spring and was not eligible for re-election. Miss DeBoer replaces Kurt Avery '74, who was elected during his senior year to represent his class for a three-year term.

OUTSTANDING MEN

The following alumni were recently selected for inclusion in the 1976 edition of Outstanding Young Men of America:

The Rev. Ronald Beyer '61, pastor of Christ Memorial Church, Holland, Mich.

Dr. Ronald Wiegerink '61, professor of special education and psychology at the Unv. of North Carolina.

Dr. Ronald Mulder '65, professor of history at Muskingum College, New Concord, Ohio.

Dr. Blair Fraser '70, research associate at The Rockefeller Univ., New York City.

Donald Battles, Jr. '68, Puppeteer and manager of Calumet (Mich.) Theatre.
HONOR PAIR O' DOCS

Drs. John '30 and William '30 Winter decided to retire quietly after 40 years of joint medical practice in the Holland, Mich. community. They took their wives to Hawaii for a one-month vacation.

The community, however, took this occasion to plan a "Surprise Appreciation Day for a Pair o' Docs" to occur upon the Winter brothers' return in late April.

"We first realized that something was going on when we saw this reception committee waiting for us in town," Dr. John said. "What could we do? It was obvious that a lot of people put a lot of work into this."

The largest event, a banquet held in Hope's Phelps Hall, was attended by 400 close friends. Commendations came from Pres. Ford and Michigan Senator Robert Griffin. But perhaps the most lasting tribute took the form of a campaign encouraging young doctors to carry on in the same spirit as had the Winter brothers.

During their career they maintained a current patient file numbering 10,000. Between them, they delivered about 6,000 babies. In addition, the Winter brothers were extremely active in many civic functions.

"Retiring was a hard decision for both of us to make," said Dr. John. "But we both felt it was the right decision, even though we know already how much we'll miss our many patients and friends."

ELECTED CHIEF JUDGE

Robert J. Danhof '47 has been elected chief judge of the Court of Appeals of the State of Michigan.

Judge Danhof received his advanced degree from the University of Michigan School of Law. He was a private practitioner in Muskegon, United States Attorney for the Western District of Michigan, delegate to the 1961 Constitutional Convention, and Executive Assistant and Legal Advisor to the Governor. He was initially appointed to the Court of Appeals by Governor George Romney. He was elected in 1970 to serve the balance of his term and again in 1974 for a six-year term.

SISTERS OF THE WORLD

A drawing by Susan Pattie Heerspink '71 is the focal point of the recently-opened Soromundi ("Sisters of the World") Room of the Greater Lansing (Mich.) YWCA facility.

According to the artist, the work "represents the people who use the YWCA. I hope it shows the friendly spirit of the YWCA, and the different ages and ethnic backgrounds of the members."

Susan and her husband, Brent Heerspink '71, operate a pottery studio near their home in Saugatuck. They spent nearly two years abroad after graduation studying their craft. While Susan has been assisting Brent this past year in their pottery venture, she has been concentrating mainly on her drawing.

TULIP TIME RECITALS

Eight alumni returned to campus this spring to participate in the sixth annual Hope College Tulip Time Organ Recitals, coordinated by Roger Davis, associate professor of music.

The recitals enabled hundreds of tourists and Holland residents to hear works performed on both the Dimnent Memorial Chapel organs—the large American Romantic Skinner organ and the recently-acquired baroque-type mechanical action organ from the Netherlands.

Alumni who performed this year were: Linda Bush '74, Richard Carlson '76, Alfred Fedak '75, Thomas Gouwens '72, Kenneth Nienhuis '70, Glenn Pride '72, Dean Vander Schaaf '71, and William Wilson '69.

Also participating in the Tulip Time recitals were Michael Bayus, a senior from Flint, Mich., and Lee Ann Soodsma, a junior from Grand Rapids, Mich.

HEADS GUIDANCE GROUP

Dr. Norman Gysbers '54 was recently elected president of the American Personnel and Guidance Association, one of the larger professional organizations in the country. "Paul Hinkamp was a remarkable person. His life bears evidence to how much a man can enrich his life, the life of his family, and the lives of those who knew him.

"Paul Hinkamp was an educator. He was successful as a teacher and administrator at both the secondary and the college level. He was a minister, an eminently successful one, serving churches in three denominations.

"Woven into the solid fabric of these years of service to his success in a third field of service. He took a new career and Rest Haven, home for the elderly in Holland, Michigan, bears witness to his success in a third field of service.

"Throughout their long and happy life together he and his beloved Martha turned their vacations into projects with a purpose and set out to visit the capitol of all the states of the Union. As mementos they brought back rocks indigenous to the places they visited. But this was not a heap to gather dust. Late in life when health was failing, Paul Hinkamp learned the art of cutting and polishing rocks. These he assembled into beautiful table tops, a monument to the human spirit which takes the mundane things of life and turns them into things of lasting beauty. "

"Paul Hinkamp was an educator. He was successful as a teacher and administrator at both the secondary and the college level. He was a minister, an eminently successful one, serving churches in three denominations.

"Paul Hinkamp was a man of faith—a faith he lived by. He knew instinctively that one who does not live according to his belief does not believe. He had none of the subconscious reservations which make men combative and intolerant. His faith was clearly defined and his commitment was complete. This gave him a quiet self confidence which in turn inspired confidence in others.

"He had an unusual capacity for work. To say he was a genius misses the mark because of its connotation, but he reaped the fruits of genius. He showed that industry can achieve everything that genius can and some things which genius cannot.

"In work he was meticulous in his attention to detail. Perfection was the standard he set for himself. Paul Hinkamp made manifest Michaelangelo's profound observation, "Trifles make perfection and perfection is not trifle." He was a perfectionist without a perfectionist's frustration because he was gentle in dealing with the shortcomings of others.

"Paul Hinkamp accepted Jesus' exhortation to love God and love one's neighbor. He believed in people. To work with him was to trust him, and to know you were being trusted. As a minister, teacher and counselor, he avoided the pitfalls of those who are by nature suspicious of their fellowmen. This sincerity in human relations needed no supporting evidence of witness. It was his own proof. By it he brought out the best in others.

"No appraisal of Paul Hinkamp is complete without reference to his sense of humor. This was not a contrived escape mechanism for one who took all of life very seriously. His humor was unique and wholly spontaneous. It was a part of his character and personality. No words can more adequately describe this trait than those used by R.M.
