Abstract

The papers of the China Mission cover the time period from 1888 to 1979. This collection includes diaries, autobiographies, articles, correspondence, and essays. Some of the earlier papers and essays include: “Sketch of the Amoy Mission, China,” 1888; “A Record of Every Day Incidents in China,” 1909; and “Our China Years, 1916-1930.” This collection reveals the history of the China Mission and many of the people involved. Some of those involved include: Elizabeth G. Bruce, Elizabeth Cappon, Alice Duryee, Jean Nienhuis, Helen Oltman, J. Platz, Rose H. Talman, John Van Nest Talmage, William and Alma Vander Meer, Florence Walvoord, and A. L. Warnshuis. This collection also contains many photographs from the mission.

History

The start of the China Missions began with David P. Abeel who made many trips to southeast Asia, with lengthy visits in Malaya, the Dutch Indies, and Borneo. He urged the Reformed Church to become involved with Foreign Missions and, in 1836, the church began the Borneo Mission. Political problems and illness among the missionaries caused the Borneo Missions to be closed. The resources of the previous mission were transferred to Amoy on the China mainland in 1842. Because David Abeel was so anxious to enter China, he arrived six months before a treaty allowed foreigners to be admitted. Although the Reformed Church had troubles in Southeast Asia, they had early contact with the Christian program in Singapore. Together, both areas worked to spread Christianity in many countries of Asia.

The Christian mission to the Chinese people is the oldest segment of the world mission of the Reformed Church. The family of the Reformed Church has served much time with the Christians in the Fukien Province in the city of Amoy. They have focused on conveying the Christian message in all aspects of life to the millions of people in that area. With the appearance of communist control in China, it was hard for Christianity to compensate for their loss of members. During this time of struggle, the missions outreach greatly changed. After many years of declined memberships, the mainland churches in China regained their strength. The China Mission continues in its strengths to spread the Christian faith.

Scope and Content

This is a collection of various contributors that were involved in the China Mission. The dates range from 1888 through 1979. There are various personal writings included in this collection that tell the story of the China Mission. Some of these include dairies, essays and papers. This collection also contains many photographs of the missionaries and the people of Amoy, China. The folders within the collection are arranged alphabetically.
