History

Founded originally in 1866, Western Theological Seminary reluctantly closed its doors for seven years starting in 1877. It reemerged in 1884 to once again produce theological graduates for the Reformed Church in America. After continued growth through the years, the Seminary faced a space shortage and 1976 began planning for a building project that would become known as the Expand Western campaign in 1978. This project eventually raised over three million dollars toward the construction and endowment of the Cook Center for Theological Research beginning in 1979. Dedicated in 1981, the expanded facility increased the Seminary's square footage 75% for growth into the 21st century.

Scope and Content

Collection contains fundraising newsletters and proposals, site planning drawings, planning committee correspondence, dedication publications, and photographs/slides of the site's demolition, construction, and dedication in 1981.
